Auschwitz architects freed

VIENNA (Reuters) — Two Austrian architects who helped design and construct the ovens at Auschwitz were acquitted on Friday of complicity in the murder of Jews, and set free. Walter Dejaco, 63, and Fritz Ertl, 71, both former S.S. officers, pleaded not guilty and said they had helped construct the Polish camp ovens but without realizing their purpose. Furthermore, they acted under military orders in wartime, they pleaded.

The trial — Austria's first arraignment for war crimes — lasted two months and over 60 witnesses including many from Poland gave evidence, but it attracted little public interest in Vienna. A second war crimes trial involving low-ranking S.S. officers charged with distributing extermination gas at Auschwitz is due to start later this month.

MIGS FLY 15 KMS. INSIDE SINAI

By ZEEV SCHUL, Jerusalem Post Military Correspondent
TEL AVIV. — Two Mig 23 aircraft, believed to have been flown by Russian pilots, violated Israeli airspace at noon Friday, in what experts here assess as one of their most brazen and longest reconnaissance overflights of Israel-held territory. The two aircraft, flying very high, crossed the Canal at a point west of Ismailia, then proceeded to head southeast, 15 kms. inside Israel, parallel to the Suez Canal, and continued over Sinai, up to a point beyond Sharm el-Sheikh, before wheeling back, westwards, into Egyptian territory. Israel fighter teams were scrambled in an attempt to intercept the intruders. The Mig 23s are a new Egyptian aircraft since they are also planned to be used as high altitude interceptors. They are relatively invulnerable themselves and able, with the help of "snap down" air-to-air missiles, to intercept high-flying attacking aircraft at lower altitudes. The Mig 23s are, however, inferior in manoeuvrability as well as in armament and endurance to supersonic aircraft in service with the IDF. Friday's overflight was the third made by the Russians. Their first attempt was made on October 10 last year when a pair of Foxbats flew parallel to the Israeli coastline but took considerable care (at that time) to stay out of Israeli airspace.

Montefiore remains coming to Jerusalem

Jerusalem Post Reporter
The remains of Sir Joseph Montefiore are to be re-interred in Jerusalem "very shortly" by the trustees of the Montefiore Ramsgate Endowment Fund here. This was disclosed last night by Rabbi Louis Rabinowitz in an address to the conference of the Hithadut Oel Britania, at Beit Agron, in the Capital. (See page 10) Montefiore, born in Leghorn in 1784, died in 1885 in Ramsgate, England, where he is buried. A deeply pious Jew, he undertook repeated missions to help his oppressed brethren in foreign lands. He made seven visits to this country where he built the first houses outside the walls of Jerusalem. The windmill he established to provide a living for the settlers now serves as a memorial to him.

Lone woman hijacks plane to Munich

MUNICH, Germany (AP) — An Alitalia Caravelle jetliner was hijacked over Italy last night by a lone woman and flown to Munich, West Germany, where the 32 passengers and crew were allowed to leave the plane, Munich authorities reported. Authorities said the woman hijacker, 40 to 50 years old, remained alone aboard the aircraft, which was ringed by police on the runway and bathed in spotlights. Attempts were made to contact the woman, who apparently carried a pistol and possibly a hand grenade, but police said they had received no word on the purpose of the hijacking. And the woman had made no immediate demands. Police said the woman spoke fluent Italian but that her nationality was not immediately established. They suggested she may be mentally ill. The woman commandeered the jetliner about 20 minutes after it left Rome Airport at 7 p.m. bound for Milan and ordered the pilot to proceed to Munich. The passengers were told en route that they would be released. The plane touched down at 8:35 at Munich-Riem Airport. After exiting, the passengers and crew were taken to a customs building where they were interrogated by Munich authorities. Observers said police made no immediate attempt to enter the plane, which was parked away from other craft on the tarmac and sealed off at the request of the pilot.

Ceausescu meets with Boumedienne

ALGIERS (Reuters) — Rumanian President Nicolae Ceausescu last night had his first meeting with Algeria's President Houari Boumedienne shortly after flying in to a warm welcome at the start of a tour of six Arab and African countries. The two leaders began formal talks today on international issues and on building up bilateral trade and cooperation — especially in oil and mineral research. President Ceausescu is accompanied on his five-day visit here by Foreign Minister Corneliu Manescu, Deputy Premier Ion Patran and Minister Bujor Almasan. Rumania's policy distinguished it from other countries of the Socialist community "and merits it an international hearing without comparison to other countries of like dimensions," the government daily "Moldjehid" said.

Pearce Commission leaves Rhodesia

SALISBURY (Reuters) — The British Pearce Commission left for home yesterday after completing its two-month mission of testing opinion on the Anglo-Rhodesian settlement terms.

TV challenge

A NEW chairman has been named to the Broadcasting Authority, that — in theory at least — controls radio and TV. Mr. Walter Eytan, long-time Ambassador to Paris, and a new 3-man plenary has been appointed, intended to represent a cross-section of public opinion. The new guide lines for TV press coverage that the Director General of the Authority, Mr. Shmuel Almog, was asked to draw up several months ago apparently have not yet emerged, and it would not be surprising if he found them difficult to formulate. It may not be useful to say at this stage that most of the trouble with TV is its monopoly position, for we cannot afford the dozens of TV stations that restore the natural democratic monopoly in the U.S., or even the single rival independent TV of Britain, not now and probably never. But it is even less useful to disregard this difficulty. It is not only that there is only one TV station, with a very great majority of families in Israel watch it, and that its influence is greatest among those who do not read newspapers, either because they do not know Hebrew well enough, or because their reading level and general educational achievement are not high enough to make our relatively sober newspapers attractive to them. People misunderstand often enough what is written in a newspaper, and they are even more likely to miss a phrase here or there of the spoken word, or to catch an interviewer's intentionally provocative question but to miss the answer. In a newspaper, too, it is easier to have second thoughts when the material is reviewed in type; a correction made here, in explanation added there. Some TV interviews in the past have clearly gone astray, but here is not much that can be done about it afterwards. Again, representatives of some of the mini-parties in the Knesset appear frequently on TV — and are given rather fuller coverage in radio news bulletins — partly because their non-establishment views appear newsworthy, and partly perhaps because other spokesmen are too busy. There was, for instance, the long and rather startling interview with Shaul M.K. Elyashiv, Halavay, recently in which he set out his views on Foreign Minister Eban's interview in the U.S. Obviously, Mr. Eban was not going to demand time to reply in the same medium, and yet it was as though Mr. Elyashiv, looking distinguished, had paid a long personal call in Israel to explain to the family what he thought of Mr. Eban. Two years ago, the Histadrut secretary, Mr. Ben-Aharon, protested that at the height of the strike and conflict at Ashdod port when TV reporters had posed their programme to mock the Histadrut, which they may well consider a dusty old body, rather than describe or analyse events during the strike. It is quite obvious that, while it is possible to choose with care the intention of representing a cross-section of public opinion, TV reporters are not and cannot be chosen by any such criteria, but only for their professional competence. This includes the ability to produce programmes of good average quality that will interest the average viewer, but not necessarily pay much regard to the public's right not to be brainwashed by what is necessarily new professional's youth brigade. The Broadcasting Authority plenary, as the "publisher," and a Director-General as the "editor" of TV are faced with a task whose importance has been underestimated. The intended guide lines should certainly be offered for public criticism before they are put into force. Work disciplines in TV House has been one of the major difficulties from the beginning, and it will take strong and persuasive personalities at the head of the Authority and in charge of day-to-day work to create a stem of comment that is less arbitrary than we have been given.

Chiang nominated again for presidency

TAIPEI (Reuters) — Nationalist Party's ruling Kuomintang President Chiang Kai-shek as the party's candidate in presidential elections later this month. The nomination, which did not come as a surprise, was made by a 99-member central committee at the end of its five-day session here today.

57 Turkish officers held as rebels

ANDARA (Reuters) — The Turkish General Staff yesterday announced the detention and dismissal from the armed forces of 57 officers on charges of underground activity. An official announcement from General Staff headquarters said the men had been providing arms and ammunition to the liberation army, which claimed responsibility for the kidnapping and murder in Istanbul last May of the Israel Consul-General, Mr. Ephraim Eilrom. Three of the principle accused in the killing escaped from a maximum security military jail in Istanbul with two other men shortly before their trial was due to end. Following the escape, Prime Minister Ezer Weizman said that members of the armed forces were implicated in the jail break. Observers saw the announcement of yesterday's detention of military officers as going far beyond this single incident.

ROME (Reuters) — Italy last week expelled four East European diplomats suspected of spying, informed sources said Friday. Officials declined all comment on the report. Formal sources said the diplomats were all from East Europe but did not specify from which countries.

Two Spanish workers shot down by police

EL FERROL DEL CAUDILLO, Spain (UPI) — The first victim of a bloody workers-police riot was buried in the cemetery of this tense port town Saturday — only 150 yards from the grey marble tomb of the family of Generalissimo Francisco Franco. Two workers died of gunshot wounds and estimated 50 persons including several police were injured after 3,000 shipyard workers protesting the dismissal of six colleagues went on a rampage of violence and clashed with police. Funeral arrangements for the other worker killed, a youth named Daniel Nizola, who died in hospital in nearby La Coruna Friday night after being shot in the head — had not yet been finalized.

About 80 mourners, mostly women, accompanied the coffin of Amador Rey, 38. Hundreds of workers were milling outside the cemetery, which had been blocked off by police to anybody except family members and friends of the deceased. Police were on guard at street corners but the town of 75,000 which was the scene of Spain's worst street fighting in almost two years was returning to normal as merchants reopened their shops.

FRANCO BIRTHPLACE

The town, a birthplace centre and Spain's number two naval base, is the birthplace of Franco. It was renamed after his own "Caudillo" (leader) after he won the civil war in 1939. The city was tense, and an estimated 1,500 police were on hand. Armed police patrolled the streets with guns at the ready. Mayor Regelio Casmalor went on

N. and S. Yemen reported near war

BEIRUT (AP) — Tension on the border between North and South Yemen threatens to explode soon into a war between the two Arab countries, according to reports reaching here yesterday. The Iraqi News Agency said in a dispatch from Sana'a, North Yemen, that the Balid and Hashed tribes of North Yemen have decided to "wage a multi-front war" against the leftist regime of South Yemen. A state of virtual tribal war prevails in Sana'a, North Yemen's capital, and the town of Taiz near the South Yemen border, the agency added. The agency said leaders of the two tribes made the decision to go to war at a meeting in Hez Zeer, near Sana'a, Friday night to avenge the death of three tribal leaders killed February 21 in an attack on South Yemeni positions near the city of Beihan. Military leaders in Sana'a supported the war decision and quantities of arms were sent to Taiz, the agency said. North Yemeni Prime Minister Mohsen al Amri was alone in opposing the war decision but this is not expected to affect the position of most government members, military and tribal leaders. The agency carried a statement

Accident in Minsk radio plant

MOSCOW (UPI) — An accident causing apparently heavy loss of life occurred on Friday at a radio manufacturing plant in Minsk, the official Tass news agency said yesterday. No details were disclosed. Tass said the Communist Party and government "expressed deep condolences to the families of workers who died and suffered on March 10 as a result of an accident in the case construction shop." The brief dispatch said a government commission was set up to determine the cause of the accident and "liquidate its aftermath," an indication it was a major tragedy. The Soviet Union rarely discloses major accidents or disasters on the ground that bad news is no news. Such disclosures are seldom accompanied by official death tolls and their salient details common to accident reports in the West.

SOVIETS SEIZE ISRAEL EMBLEMS

TEL AVIV. — Soviet customs authorities have confiscated Israel emblems and banners being carried by the Israeli youth judo team now in Leningrad, members of the team told Israel Radio by phone last night. The items were to have been exchanged for similar mementos, with members of other national teams at the judo matches in Leningrad. The Israel judoists reported that they were given a courteous welcome upon arriving in Leningrad, and have been accommodated in a good hotel. The International Judo Association agreed to hold the matches in Leningrad on condition that an Israel team be allowed to participate. (Nim)

U.S. suspends Canal efforts

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State William Rogers' efforts to promote an interim agreement between Israel and Egypt to reopen the Suez Canal have been temporarily suspended, State Department officials said yesterday, according to UPI. While the official reason for the interruption was given as a means of aiding the negotiations sought by U.N. mediator Gunnar Jarring, the Israeli ambassador here, Mr. Yitzhak Rabin, said that Mr. Rogers' negotiations would wait upon the return of President Nixon from Moscow. Egypt's President Anwar Sadat was reportedly cool toward Mr. Rogers' proposal to hold "talks in close proximity" with Israel in a New York hotel to discuss the Canal issue. Israel has accepted the suggestion of "proximity talks." There has been no public word from Egypt on its position, and officially the State Department will not even say whether the U.S. has formally approached Egypt on the question. But several knowledgeable U.S. officials left the unmistakable impression that American diplomats in Cairo have held at least informal exchanges and have a clear idea of the Egyptian attitude. According to these officials, the main focus of international diplomacy in the Middle East is now on Dr. Jarring's renewed mediating mission in attempting to promote an overall peace settlement. Mr. Rogers' mediating effort, while shelved for the moment, is not dead. Officials report that the U.S. remains ready to play a role if both Egypt and Israel want it. There is dissatisfaction within the Department that the U.S. has not been able to break the Middle East deadlock, but there is satisfaction that the cease-fire which began August, 1970 is generally holding up. Officials familiar with the area see no sign of an imminent breakdown in the cease-fire.

Lebanese stage anti-terrorist demonstrations

Jerusalem Post Arab Affairs Reporter
Lebanese villagers in the southern district of Hasbaya staged street demonstrations over the week-end protesting against the return of saboteurs to the area, Beirut reports said yesterday. Amman Radio last night quoted reports from the Lebanese Capital that about 300 southern villagers yesterday drove in a motorcade to the palace of President Suleiman Franjeh to demand that the terrorists be kept away from populated areas and that the Lebanese army tighten its control in the area. The radio said a team representing the crowd of villagers met the director-general of the President's Office, Dr. Butros Deeb, who promised to convey their demands to the President. Earlier reports said hundreds of villagers converged on the southern town of Hasbaya on Friday to demonstrate for the expulsion of saboteurs from the region. The Lebanese Interior Ministry said the demonstrations were prompted by the appearance of Israel reconnaissance planes over the region, the scene of two Israel strikes against Fatah bases in the past fortnight.

Uganda's Amin due in Cairo

Jerusalem Post Arab Affairs Reporter
Uganda President Idi Amin is to visit Cairo on Thursday for five-day talks with Egyptian officials, Cairo Radio reported last night. The Egyptian state radio did not disclose the purpose of General Amin's visit except to note he will hold intensive talks with President Anwar Sadat and his top officials. General Amin is scheduled to visit Sudan following his Egyptian trip.

Soviet sells Egypt 16 passenger planes

CAIRO (Reuters) — The Soviet Union will sell Egypt eight TU-154 jets and eight Tu-40 passenger planes under an agreement to be concluded here next month, an Egyptian Airlines official said yesterday. Abdel Hamid Mahmoud, chairman of the board of directors of the Egyptian Airlines Company, said the 16 planes will be used to reinforce Egypt's civil aviation fleet. Mr. Mahmoud returned yesterday from a three-week visit to the Soviet Union.

No Jarring shift on 1971 memo

Jerusalem Post Diplomatic Correspondent
U.N. Envoy Gunnar Jarring has not given any indication that he will abandon, or even alter, his call for Israel to commit itself, before negotiations begin, to withdraw to the international boundary with Egypt, authoritative sources said in Jerusalem yesterday. Israel totally rejects the call, made in Dr. Jarring's memorandum of February 8 last year, and wants the envoy to declare that he does not see it as the basis for the continuation of his mission. Israel also wants him to make it clear that he does not see himself bound by the General Assembly resolution of last December, which enclosed the memorandum. Israel's view is that Dr. Jarring should bring the sides together for negotiations without preconditions and that his only mandate is Security Council resolution 242 of November, 1947. Israel's U.N. Ambassador, Mr. Yosef Tekoaeh, repeated Israel's views to Dr. Jarring at his meeting last week. They are due to meet again this week after they meet, separately, with U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim. The Jerusalem sources said that Israel is not trying to persuade Dr. Jarring to "soften" his memorandum, as some reports said he was ready to do, but to get him to drop it altogether. He has no inclination to do so, or to dissociate himself from the Assembly resolution, they said. Israel would also like the envoy to commit himself to refrain in the future from taking stands on substantive issues. This will only lead to deadlocks, with the parties, or one of them, negotiating with the envoy himself, instead of with each other. The basic fact obstructing the Jarring mission is that the Egyptian Government is steadfastly refusing to change its position, the sources said. Cairo's demand for a total Israeli withdrawal and for the "restoration of the rights of the Palestinian people" are incompatible with meaningful negotiations, they said. Foreign Minister Abba Eban is expected to review development in the Jarring mission at the Cabinet meeting today.

Britain to sell Israel 3 subs, Arabs report

Jerusalem Post Arab Affairs Reporter
The 18-nation Arab League's bureau in London yesterday claimed that Britain will be supplying Israel with three submarines and not two as was reported in the London press. Cairo Radio last night said the extent of the Anglo-Israel deal has been uncovered by an inquiry conducted by the Arab League's office in London. The Egyptian state radio said a report on the deal had been dispatched to the Cairo headquarters of the Arab League, whose members yesterday met at the ambassadorial level. Earlier reports said that, on opening its 57th session, the Arab League discussed the suspended relations between a number of Arab states and West Germany and decided that each state should take its own decision on whether to restore ties with Bonn.

From the staff to the Cabinet

THE Former Chief of Staff Rav-Aluf Bar-Lev became Minister of Commerce this week, amidst a rather surprising outburst of controversy, mainly in his own party — the Alignment Party.

considerable contribution to discussions about security problems in the Cabinet. The objectors to his appointments say that it is very undesirable in principle for a man, however good personally, to go straight from the Army to the Cabinet. They argue that Rav-Aluf Bar-Lev should have spent months in the hurly-burly of political life to qualify for a political appointment. They claim that he knows nothing about the subtleties of Israeli politics; he himself admitted on television that he does not belong to any of the three parties inside the Alignment.

spend many years in the Knesset in the hope of getting into the Cabinet eventually. It will be remembered that both Moshe Dayan and Abba Eban were obliged to fight elections before they obtained Cabinet appointments, after giving up their posts as Chief of Staff and Ambassador to Washington and the U.N. respectively. On the other hand, Ezer Weizman of Gahal went straight from the Army into the Cabinet. This seems to be one of those cases in which, as the famous Rabbi once said: "You are both right."

Jewish Defence League raises doubts

By GAIL VANGEE (Grade 10) Bar Ilan High School, Nahariya THE Jewish Defence League — an impressive sounding name. It makes one think of unity, pride, action... all these seem to suit it quite well, but what in fact is this League? Such were my thoughts after hearing recently various items on the news concerning Rabbi Meir Kahane and his "active band."

who accepted "pre-determined decisions" without fighting, and without trying to change them. Rabbi Kahane mentioned with scorn... "those rich fat Americans..." Doubts rise As I sat listening to these cynical words, a feeling of uncertainty rose within me. What was it? Why did I sense it? Well, it could be a number of things, I thought... Perhaps I didn't agree with his principles... or was it that I just didn't trust him? And if so — why? As far as his principles are concerned, in my mind there is no doubt. Any Jew who doesn't concern himself with the plight of fellow-Jews in trouble, cannot honestly call himself faithful to his race. If this is so, what was it that was holding me back from being "taken in" completely? Well, if it's not the aims... perhaps it's the "means". Are these means, i.e., the way the League deals with its problems, acceptable? Must we in effect "sacrifice" the safety of the numerous other Jews in the Diaspora to fresh waves of anti-Semitism caused by Rabbi Kahane's actions? Perhaps we should ask — isn't the League in fact contradicting itself? On the one hand, they're working in order to save Russian and Syrian Jews, but then, on the other hand, they are themselves in danger of creating anti-Semitism.

Junior Postbag

JORUN-THOR EING-OLSEN, ROSTBARKEN 5, 9000-TRONSO (NORWAY) sent a letter, addressed to a Jewish boy (aged 17-20), a kibbutz, Israel, which the Post Office passed on to The Jerusalem Post Junior. In her letter, Jorun (Joje) writes: "Hi! So you won! My name is Jorun (I'm called Joje) and I'm a Norwegian girl. I always wanted to know a Jewish boy, but I didn't know how to get one to write to, so I had to take a chance. You can see from the envelope what the result is... My interests? I study history, in my spare time I read psychology, I read very much Shakespeare, I love Bach, and I have motor-bike. If you're still alive I can tell you that I am lying. I'll be 17 on May 14 (you know that date, don't you?) What do I look like? Well... let's forget that now. You'll soon enough get disappointed if I send you a picture. But remember that I'll get mad if you don't write! And that's not very nice, is it?"

Simple answer The answer, according to the "Kahane Theory", is simple. The moment that a Jew living outside Israel, hear that fellow Jews are suffering, I must help; must try to release these Jews from their bondage. If anti-Semitism will be caused as a result of my actions, it's a shame, but as the saying goes, "too bad!" These efforts I make, in turn, will give freedom to a number of Jews, enabling them to emigrate to Israel. Every Jew should ideally live in Israel, so if my actions cause anti-Semitism against those living in the Diaspora, it can't be helped. These Jews, who still have the chance to emigrate, should be made aware of their situation, so that they will take the necessary steps to move. From here I move on to another point which is worrying me. Why has Rabbi Kahane decided to start this League during the last couple of years? I gathered from his speech that he was an "all-out" Zionist — if so, where has he been up till now? Why hasn't he been living in Israel?

THE HEBREW UNIVERSITY OF JERUSALEM The Committee for Advanced Studies The Faculty of Science ANNOUNCES THAT REGISTRATION FOR STUDIES TOWARDS THE M.Sc. DEGREE for the academic year 1972/73 HAS COMMENCED AND WILL END ON AUGUST 31, 1972. Programmes towards the M.Sc. are offered in: Mathematics, Computer Science, Statistics, Physics, Meteorology, Chemistry (Inorganic, Analytical, Organic, Physical, Theoretical), Biochemistry, Botany, Genetics, Applied Genetics, Oceanography (Marine Biology, Marine Geology and General), Microbiology (in conjunction with the Faculty of Medicine), Physiology, Zoology, Biophysics, Geology, Geography, History and Philosophy of Science. An M.Sc. in the BASIC MEDICAL SCIENCES is awarded by the Faculty of Science and the Faculty of Medicine in: Anatomy, Biochemistry, Physiology, Developmental Biology, Pharmacology, Pathology, and Nutrition. An M.Sc. in SCIENCE TEACHING is awarded by this Faculty in cooperation with other Faculties. THE SCHOOL OF APPLIED SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY offers M.Sc. curricula, in cooperation with the Faculty of Science, in: Applied Mathematics, Applied Physics, Applied Chemistry, Material Sciences, Applied Microbiology, Textile Science and Applied Hydrology. Studies in Human Environmental Sciences will be initiated in 1972/73. The School of Applied Science and Technology also awards a DIPLOMA in Groundwater Research and Textile Chemistry. Candidates, holding a B.Sc. degree or its equivalent, should contact the Secretariat of the Faculty of Science, Givat Ram campus, Jerusalem.

RUSSIAN IMMIGRANTS MUST CHANGE

By LEAH FIRST (Grade 11) Hugin High School, Haifa. THE immigrants from Russia ask very much from our country. The Government supplies them with housing and employment, and it helps them by grants of reductions in income tax and gives them many other facilities. Yet, when the immigrants come to Israel, they refuse to accept homes prepared for them by the Government. They have been advised by their families in Israel what to accept, and what to refuse. And they succeed in getting what they want by demonstrations. I often ask myself why my parents who arrived in Israel after two World Wars, never refused to take what was offered to them, and were satisfied with what they got. Now everything has changed. Immigrants coming to Israel make great demands. Why do they not try to understand that it is impossible for our Government to fulfil all their wants? Why don't they cooperate with us and let us solve the problems together? By strikes they will never win the hearts and understanding of Israeli youth. They will never be received with open arms by Israeli teenagers, because we feel that the immigrants make demands without offering anything in return.

UNIVERSITY OF HAIFA REGISTRATION HAS BEGUN for studies toward a B.Sc. degree in Biological Sciences in the academic year 1972/73. This programme may be combined with a programme of teacher training leading toward the Teaching Licence in Biology. Most of the first-year studies will be given at the University campus, the School of Education of the Kibbutz Movement, Oranim. Registration will end on March 20, 1972. For information, entrance requirements and registration forms please apply to: 1. Office of the Registrar, University of Haifa, Mount Carmel. 2. The School of Education of the Kibbutz Movement, Oranim. A general university entrance examination for applicants to B.A. studies will be held at the University campus on Thursday, March 23, 1972.

TENNIS FOR GIRLS AT LONG LAST

By JACK LEON Jerusalem Post Sports Reporter

GIRLS are the cinderellas of sport in Israel. This applies to tennis, as to most other sports. Now, however, Israel's top dozen girl tennis players are benefiting greatly from the weekly coaching they have been receiving since November from Australian visitor Vicky Lancaster. In a scheme initiated by the Israel Lawn Tennis Association, Wimbledon player Vicky is training a group between the ages of 11 and 15 at the Ramat Gan Club, and also 16 and 17-year-olds at Kfar Hamaccabia in Ramat Chen. (In addition, she is coaching the national women's squad at Zehala.)

developed quite an extensive training scheme for the "male side" of the game, it will be able to concentrate more on the coaching of women and girl players, as was the pattern in post-war Australia. The seven girls, most of whom have no private coaching, are unanimous in pointing out that they would like nothing better than to be given the chance to take part in the kind of intensive training programme outlined by Vicky. Hope at last Tel Aviv Hapoel's Ronit Heller, current national girls' under-13 and under-15 champion, spoke on behalf of the squad when she informed The Post: "Until Vicky's coaching scheme, we girls had little encouragement from the LL.T.A., which seems to have concentrated its energies on the boys, while leaving us out in the cold. We are benefiting a lot from having someone not only to instruct us, but also to inspire us. If she goes, we hope that she will be replaced by another coach as good as she is." The seven girls, who now only have the opportunity to play once or twice a week at their clubs in the Tel Aviv area, are particularly keen on some sort of a league being formed for them, in which they could participate with older girls and, if necessary, women as well. The LL.T.A. does plan to initiate a women's league soon, to supplement its league programme for men started more than 30 years ago. Association chairman Avram Feiger told me earlier this week. He also stressed that in fact the LL.T.A. is keen to develop the girls' game here, and is making every effort to find a suitable coach to continue Vicky Lancaster's training programme. Mr. Feiger offered further welcome encouragement to these young tennis enthusiasts when he added: "Our programme is being carried out with a view to sending the best girls for tournament play abroad within the next year or two."

Like father

Twenty-year-old Vicky, a former prominent Australian junior, came here last October to compete in the LL.T.A.'s autumn international circuit. She then stayed on as house-guest of Israel's national tennis coach, Ronald Steele, and his wife Helen, who are old friends from Australia. Vicky was coached in Melbourne by Mrs. Steele's father, Keith Rogers, who numbers Margaret Court, Wimbledon Champion on three occasions, among his many well-known pupils.

developed quite an extensive training scheme for the "male side" of the game, it will be able to concentrate more on the coaching of women and girl players, as was the pattern in post-war Australia. The seven girls, most of whom have no private coaching, are unanimous in pointing out that they would like nothing better than to be given the chance to take part in the kind of intensive training programme outlined by Vicky. Hope at last Tel Aviv Hapoel's Ronit Heller, current national girls' under-13 and under-15 champion, spoke on behalf of the squad when she informed The Post: "Until Vicky's coaching scheme, we girls had little encouragement from the LL.T.A., which seems to have concentrated its energies on the boys, while leaving us out in the cold. We are benefiting a lot from having someone not only to instruct us, but also to inspire us. If she goes, we hope that she will be replaced by another coach as good as she is." The seven girls, who now only have the opportunity to play once or twice a week at their clubs in the Tel Aviv area, are particularly keen on some sort of a league being formed for them, in which they could participate with older girls and, if necessary, women as well. The LL.T.A. does plan to initiate a women's league soon, to supplement its league programme for men started more than 30 years ago. Association chairman Avram Feiger told me earlier this week. He also stressed that in fact the LL.T.A. is keen to develop the girls' game here, and is making every effort to find a suitable coach to continue Vicky Lancaster's training programme. Mr. Feiger offered further welcome encouragement to these young tennis enthusiasts when he added: "Our programme is being carried out with a view to sending the best girls for tournament play abroad within the next year or two."

Hard to believe

In spite of all this, after hearing Rabbi Kahane actually speak on the League, I find it very hard to believe that he is doing all he does because of some personal interest. Writing from the point of view of a Jew who came from the Diaspora, perhaps the reasons why I cannot accept Kahane develop from my background. I cannot be persuaded by fanatical theories, because I have lived in the reality they deal with, and I know that they cannot easily be accepted. On the other hand, through simple logic I can accept the League. "Life or Death?" Which is it to be for my fellow Jews? (And death does not only denote physical death...) From here I can understand one thing: destroying an office (books, shelves, desks, papers); demonstrating — these are not wrong when it is a matter of life or death. On the other hand, killing innocent people, by bombs (which has not been done by the League), that would be something else. People can claim that no measure will be too strong in order to preserve Israel (the nation) and here I do agree. But at this point I unfortunately display a weakness which is only human in an ex-Diaspora Jew such as myself. I would never accept that killing innocent people for the benefit of keeping Israel alive is just. I can see that philosophically I am wrong, but then I'm only human... Rabbi Kahane's talk was certainly very interesting, but, as I left the hall, I knew that I still had a number of doubts to resolve, before being able to accept the League.

More coaching

Apart from these requirements, the girls need a regular coach, who will both organize their training and show a personal interest in them, states the attractive young Australian, who leaves for tournament play in England next month after participating in Israel's coming spring tennis circuit. Vicky Lancaster realizes that this is a pretty tall order in Israel, where the youth — in contrast to Australia — have no tradition of dedication to sport. But on the positive side, she feels that now the LL.T.A. has

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

By MARK WAYSMAN, (15), 5 Behov Degel Nevean, Kiryat Moshe, Jerusalem. And not one man cried When he died — It was wrong for him, But it's right for the law; 'Cause you're the law — And whatever you do is humane. They strung the noose Around his neck — But none of the jury Gave a heck... They weren't biased By race or creed. But by the very urgent need Of modern civil society To remove all dangers immediately. They struck the wires to his head, (He's deathly white from what the priest just said) They bound him down to the chair, Let him say a final prayer, Then pulled the lever — instant death! The gas, it slowly filled the chamber, (Is this better than a life of hard labour?) The men outside, They patiently sat, Waiting... He lay with his head in the groove, Waiting... For the metal blade To fall from the sky... And now I'm writing, Asking "Why?"

How good are your nerves?

By TAMI MOSSAYEFF (19) 36 Behov Ben Yehuda, Jerusalem ARE you in the habit of travelling on Israeli buses? If you are, try to remember how your last bus ride left you. Were you thinking, "What joy it is to know there's such a good bus service where I live!" or did it leave you thinking, "Oh how monstrous! Never again will I spend a penny on hairdressers, we have got to get a car!" The sad truth is that far too many people come off the bus with their nerves on edge. This is the result of a sad lack of insistence on hygiene and service. First of all, why is it that buses are so ridiculously slow to arrive? Then, even when they do get to a stop, the chances of getting on are slight; all too often a passenger is faced with the choice of making a dash for it, and running the risk of having the automatic doors catch him in their midst (which is unpleasant to say the least), or waiting for the next bus, which in all probability will also take its time. But if you have actually managed to get on a bus, keep your nerves steady, you will need them. As soon as you get on, what happens? Foreigners find that the man at the wheel is nothing like the sweet-natured sabra that they have so vividly pictured for themselves. Instead, he is unbending and rude. "I'll tell you where to get off," he says. But the tone of his voice implies "What an effort, and how annoying, to have to speak to her at all!" In the end, he forgets you, and you have to rely on inspired guesswork in order to know where to get off. Still it is nice to know that not everyone is treated in this way. For example, when a brown-haired young lady got on, and put forward the same request, the driver not only offered to show her where to get off, but he actually said that he would get off with her, and show her the location himself... if she'd wait till he was off duty. A few minutes later the driver again showed how forthcoming he could be, when a stout gentleman came on. From my seat half way down the bus I heard his discussion with the driver, which I, and every one else, could easily follow. It ranged from the Defence Minister's private life to the way of coping with women's impulsiveness. (Who says drivers are uneducated? I found this one not only educated, but also educating!) It was however, irritating that no one could hear the radio limited aid of this kind alone would not suffice for the Egyptians if they launched an all-out confrontation with Israel. Turning to internal affairs, Mr. Bar-Lev spoke in sombre terms of deteriorating labour relations. The situation had to be mended before it exploded, he warned. As for the dispute in the bakeries, the Minister held that the bakery workers were not so bad off; and he opposed granting what amounts to a 54 per cent wage increase.

Earlier in the day, Mr. Bar-Lev, and senior officials of his Ministry called on Mr. Mark Moscovitz, president of the Manufacturers' Association. Also present at the meeting were the Association's deputy president, Mr. Avraham Shevli, and its Director-General, Mr. Peleg Tamir.

Each of the two Volcani scientists is charged with bribe-taking and breach of trust, and Bayer faces the additional charge of acting as go-between. District Attorney Victoria Ostrowsky-Cohen asked that Frankenthal be brought to trial soon, as he is needed to testify at other trials. She also requested that Bayer be tried before Dr. Lahav so that he could testify at the trial of his chief.

When Mr. Weitzman, now Herut Executive chairman, was asked to resign yesterday, all he had to say was: "I do not think that now is the right time for launching political affairs about the waiting period. I think Bar-Lev does not know everything that took place then. I, too, do not know all that is to be known about the waiting period. Indeed there are few people who know everything about what happened at that time."

Leftists sweep student elections at Haifa U.

Jerusalem Post Reporter HAIFA. — The leftist "Yesh" list scored a runaway victory in the Haifa University elections to the Students' Council, which were held on Tuesday and Wednesday. The list, made up of new-immigrant, Arab and Kibbutzist students known for their leftist leanings, won 32 of the 40 seats on the Council.

Volcani officials charged with taking bribe to hide test results

TEL AVIV. — The director and chief technologist of the Milk Department at Beit Dagan's Volcani Institute were charged yesterday in the District Court here with taking a IL5,000 bribe from the manager of the Kfir dairies, to cover up results of a test run on the dairies' cheese. Dairy manager Zvi Frankenthal, 29, of Be'er Brak, was also charged.

The indictment states that Volcani milk technologist Friedrich Bayer was asked by Thuvya last November to run a test on a sample of Kfir cheese. When the cheese failed to pass the test, Department director Dr. Eytan Brand allegedly told Bayer to inform Kfir manager Frankenthal, who is accused of having offered a substantial bribe for a second test on his cheese. Mr. Bayer is charged with taking IL5,000 from Frankenthal on December 23 (IL5,000 of it for Dr. Lahav), running a second test, and cancelling the results of the first from Thuvya.

Police find hide-out in Renault kidnapping after victim's release

PARIS. — Police at dawn yesterday broke into the studio apartment where Renault official Robert Nogrette was held at gun-point for 48 hours, after he was kidnapped by a Maoist "commando squad" Mr. Nogrette was released Friday.

The flat, in a modern, elegant block, was just over a mile from the spot where 63-year-old Mr. Nogrette was seized while on his way to work last Wednesday. It was just within the 16th Arrondissement — traditionally associated with the well-off bourgeoisie whom the leftists profess to hate.

The flat was deserted when police broke in, but informed sources said detectives found the weapons used by the three or four young members of the new popular resistance group — one of them a girl whom — which claimed credit for the kidnapping.

On Friday morning Mr. Nogrette walked into a laundry in the Left Bank student quarter and asked to use the telephone while thousands of police were scouring Paris for him and his kidnapers.

He first telephoned his home but could get no reply. So he called police who rushed him off to detective headquarters for questioning.

The rapid discovery of the flat follows the minute description of it given by Mr. Nogrette to police after his release. During his detention, he saw a big advertising poster outside the window and heard noises from a nearby construction site.

Police have apparently not yet found the people involved in the kidnapping, although several dozen leftists have been questioned. Mr. Nogrette looked through 3,000 photos of known leftists shown him by police during his seven-hour talk with them Friday. But he was unable to identify the kidnapers as they were always hooded in his presence.

He told reporters yesterday that he was hit, gagged, chained hand and foot and put in a trunk after his abduction on Wednesday morning.

"I lived 48 hours with a pistol practically on my stomach." Despite the ever-present pistol, he said he had not been badly treated after the first half hour and added that his captors had discussed politics with him.

A personnel executive at Renault, Mr. Nogrette was kidnapped in retaliation for the death of a 23-year-old ex-Renault employee, who was shot dead by a security guard during a demonstration at the Renault plant two weeks ago.

Abolition of the Protestant-dominated provincial parliament. "Total amnesty" for all "political prisoners," tried and untried, in England and Ireland, and for those on wanted lists.

The Provisional is the more powerful of two I.R.A. wings operating in Northern Ireland. Its formal strength has been estimated at 2,000, but when pressed, it could call on virtually every Catholic youngster who can toss a brick.

The official wing is the older, Marxist-orientated, it is working toward an all-Ireland Socialist farmers' republic. It said Friday it would not observe the truce.

The fiery Northern Ireland representative, in the British Parliament, Bernadette Devlin, has been banned from entering France, government officials confirmed in Paris Friday. Miss Devlin had been invited to attend a meeting on the Irish resistance movement in Bordeaux, March 14. The French authorities said that she had been banned from French territory as of last May 12 — but gave no specific reason.

Sources said the decision was made on the basis of "statements likely to disturb public order" she made November 11, 1970 at a meeting sponsored by the Secours Rouge (Red Aid) in Paris. They did not elaborate.

In a statement telephoned to the British National News Agency in London, the Provisionals said the cease-fire was a gesture of sincerity toward a lasting peace, for which the following conditions would be necessary:

• Immediate withdrawal of the

Lon Nol seizes full Cambodia powers

PHNOM PENH. — The Cambodian Government collapsed into complete political chaos yesterday following Marshal Lon Nol's surprise proclamation that he is assuming full government powers as the nation's new chief of state.

One-time General Sirik Matak was proclaimed the new Prime Minister under Lon Nol, a move certain to bring protests from university students who have been demanding Matak's ouster for the last week.

At a hastily called news conference yesterday morning, Minister of Information Long Eoret said Matak "automatically" ascended to the post of Prime Minister by virtue of his previous position as Prime Minister-delegate. He claimed this was provided for in the old Cambodian constitution, which is still in effect since Lon Nol announced Friday he was scrapping the about-to-be adopted new constitution.

Yesterday he closed the Constituent Assembly. Military police surrounded the Assembly building during the night and turned away deputies from the gates.

Members expressed bitter disappointment over the Marshal's decision. He had previously been Prime Minister.

Head of state Cheng Heng Friday night resigned and handed over the highest office of the nation to the 58-year-old party crippled Marshal, who is now ruling by decree without democratic institutions and with only vestiges of a constitution.

Three hours after Chen Heng's shock resignation, the Marshal himself went on radio to announce his first decree — to close the Constituent Assembly.

Plot to poison Chicago water

CHICAGO (AP). — Two young men pleaded innocent Friday to charges of conspiracy to commit murder in connection with what authorities called a plot to poison Chicago's water supply.

The alleged plot was never carried out, and city officials have said it was a ridiculous scheme that would have had no chance of success.

Steven Per, 18, and Allan Schwander, 19, were indicted by a grand jury last week. They were accused of growing dangerous biological cultures to disperse in the water supplies of Chicago and other Illinois cities. The indictment charged the two plotted to build a master race by forming a group and immunizing members against the deadly cultures.

Mitterrand attacks Israel on eve of visit

By JACK MAURICE
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

PARIS. — French Socialist Party officials are trying to play down the significance of the astonishing anti-Israel statement which the party's First Secretary Francois Mitterrand made here only a few days before his forthcoming visit to Israel.

Mr. Mitterrand is due in Jerusalem on Tuesday on a four-day visit, accompanied by two of the party's national secretaries, Gerard Jacques and Georges Filloud, and Jacques Enock, a member of the executive committee.

Mr. Mitterrand caused surprise at a press conference on Thursday when he said: "When we hear that the Palestinians have lost their homes, their land and the hope of living in a country of their own, we Socialists are on the side of those Palestinians. It is natural for us to defend oppressed people."

The Socialist leader ranked the Palestinians with Soviet Jewry, Spanish opponents of the Franco regime and U.S. Communist rebel Angela Davis, as people whom Socialists were morally bound to support.

He said, "Liberty is not something which can be discussed or divided." Israel officials here do not appear to have been very impressed by Mitterrand's explanations that Mr. Mitterrand had been quoted out of context. For the context of his remarks gives added belief to his expression of support for the Palestinians.

Israel tells U.N. commission 4,000 Syrian Jews 'prisoners of state'

UNITED NATIONS (Reuter). — Israeli Ambassador Jacob Doron charged before the U.N. Human Rights Commission on Friday that the whole of the 4,000-strong Jewish community in Syria have become "prisoners of the State."

Mr. Doron said since the plight of Jews in Syria was debated by the commission in Geneva in February last year, their situation had become even more grave.

"A small community of about 4,000 people is being discriminated against in the most drastic and cruel manner for no other reason but that they are Jews," he said.

"They are confined to ghettos in Damascus, Aleppo and Hama, and are not allowed to go to any point located further than four kilometers from the centres of those towns."

Mr. Doron said Jewish shops were marked, and Syrian civil servants and members of the armed forces were not allowed to buy from them. Jews were not allowed to sell or mortgage their immovable property, and if a Jew died intestate, his property was taken over by the government.

Jews in Syria could not engage in foreign trade or obtain bank credits. Jewish schools had been placed under Moslem supervisors, and Jews were refused passports or other travel documents.

The Israeli ambassador said the daily lives of the Jewish community were supervised by a committee of members of the Syrian security and military intelligence services, the Ministry of Justice, the Finance Ministry and the Council of Palestinian Refugees.

Regulations passed by the committee were "designed to humiliate and suppress their defenceless victims," he said.

If a Jew managed to escape across the border, members of his family and his friends were "arrested and subjected to torture" to discover the method of escape.

All these facts were denied by the Syrian Government, but Syria still refused to allow Jews to leave the country.

On January 28 this year, an international conference, chaired by Alain Pöser, president of the French Senate, and comprising delegates from the U.S., and 13 European and Latin American countries, had protested against the treatment of Jews in Syria and appealed to its president to let them leave the country.

"Unfortunately, all appeals to the Syrian Government to let their Jewish prisoners go were so far in vain. I therefore place their tragedy before you," Mr. Doron said.

Mr. Doron also charged that Soviet Jewish emigration to Israel had recently been blocked by new Soviet restrictions.

Arab federation summit today

Jerusalem Post Arab Affairs Reporter
The leaders of Egypt, Syria and Libya will today hold a summit meeting in Cairo to map out a Middle East strategy within a tripartite federation.

The leaders are first scheduled to attend the inaugural session of a newly formed federal parliament of 60 members representing the 16 federated countries. In his speech, Hafez Assad and Libya's Muammar Gaddafi will be sworn in as members of the federal president's council which is headed by Egyptian President.

Assad and Gaddafi arrived in Cairo last night for the summit. Assad will then deliver a speech. The Egyptian President returned to Cairo on Friday in a three-day visit to Saudi Arabia, Kuwait where he held talks with King Faisal and Prince Salem, es-Sabah on what described as pooling Arab general principles. P.F.L.P. splits again

The radical Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine led by Dr. George Habash, officially split on Friday when a group of its leaders established a new organization. The dissidents said their movement will bear the name "The Popular Revolutionary Front for the Liberation of Palestine" and will be "left wing." They labelled Habash's Marxist group as "right wing."

The new movement will be the third major offshoot of the P.F.L.P. after the Popular Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine and the P.F.L.P.-The General Command.

In a statement issued in Beirut, the breakaways said they were opposed to Dr. Habash's use of violence abroad including the hijacking of airliners. They asserted that the P.F.L.P. was responsible for the recent hijacking of a Lufthansa jumbo jet to Aden.

Mrs. Gandhi's party heads for landslide

NEW DELHI (Reuter). — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi headed yesterday towards a landslide victory in Indian State elections, the final step to her goal of consolidated political power for herself and her party throughout the nation.

The Prime Minister's Congress party picked up almost 85 per cent of the first substantial results, announced from week-long elections for 16 state legislatures and two municipal councils.

The Congress held substantial leads in all six states being counted yesterday, winning 255 of the first 306 seats declared.

The party demonstrated its strength by winning 48 of the first 50 seats declared for the 287-member Andhra Pradesh Assembly; 33 of 38 in the 168-member Gujarat Assembly; 106 of 126 in the 270-member Maharashtra Assembly; and 47 of 61 in the 216-member Mysore Assembly.

At least three persons were killed in election violence, and a curfew was imposed on part of Calcutta as the turbulent state of West Bengal went to the polls yesterday, the final day of elections.

Yesterday's incidents in Calcutta brought the election death toll to 27, of whom 13 have died in West Bengal. An official report said one police officer was killed in Calcutta when he was fired on by a group of men who attacked them with home-made bombs and guns, and two were killed in the Barranagar area of northern Calcutta.

In past incidents in northern Calcutta, supporters of the ruling Congress party have killed dozens of Maoist Naxalites. There have been other cases where — in broad daylight — people's heads have been chopped off and brandished as trophies aboard the city trams.

For yesterday's West Bengal polling, more than 100,000 police and 30,000 soldiers were on duty. The area as the centre of attention, headway and there were no significant voting was also going on in nine other states and two territories administered from Delhi.

The main electoral battle in Bengal is between the Congress party and the Marxist Communist party, the MCP, led by Jyoti Basu.

Political violence in West Bengal is one of the election issues the MCP and the Congress are blaming the other for, which claimed more than 1,000 in the first nine months of year. (AP, Reuter)

Russian carrier sent to help sub

WASHINGTON (AP). — The first helicopter carrier Leningrad reached an area in the North Atlantic where a Soviet missile submarine has been adrift for more than two weeks, the U.S. reported yesterday.

The Leningrad joined some other Russian vessels for around the submarine, about 100 miles east-northeast Newfoundland. The navy said the submarine was not yet making headway and there were no significant towing operations.

I.R.A. proclaims truce but soldiers shot up

BELFAST (AP). — A three-day week-end truce announced by the Nationalist Provisional Wing of the Irish Republican Army (I.R.A.), was only an hour old when a Claymore mine erupted early yesterday, as soldiers travelled down a road near Newry on the border with the Irish Republic.

Military headquarters said the troops came under a volley of gunfire as they got out of their vehicles, but there were no casualties. The raiders fled into the darkness of the surrounding countryside.

Asked if the army regarded this as a breach of the truce, a spokesman said: "We don't recognize in the first place that there is a truce."

There was no official reaction in the British Capital. It was made known that the government would not "deal with murderers" or "digress" the I.R.A. with a reply.

But Irishmen broadly in sympathy with the I.R.A.'s battle to unite Ireland expressed hope the cease-fire would prod the British Government to unveil political initiatives for an end to the violence. The struggle has claimed 263 lives since August 1969, when British troops were dispatched to the province.

In a statement telephoned to the British National News Agency in London, the Provisionals said the cease-fire was a gesture of sincerity toward a lasting peace, for which the following conditions would be necessary:

• Immediate withdrawal of the Cars burst into flames through gas U.S. producer sentenced for threat to airlines

LOWELL, Massachusetts (AP). — A youth died of burns and 11 others were injured on Friday when their cars burst into flames after apparently passing over gas from a ruptured 500-gallon propane tank on the Lowell Technical Institute campus.

Authorities said Thomas Bragdon, 17, of Dracut, died at Massachusetts General Hospital of second and third degree burns over more than 90 per cent of his body.

U.S. producer sentenced for threat to airlines

LOS ANGELES. — An American film and television producer has been sentenced to 30 years in prison for making false bomb threats to four U.S. airlines and for shooting at FBI agents.

Robert Dellinger, 42, was sentenced in the U.S. District Court Friday for demanding $200,000 each from United, American, Delta and Trans World Airlines last January 7, for information concerning bombs that he said were aboard airliners.

Dellinger's sentence is subject to review after a 90-day psychiatric examination, court officials said.

The government charged that Dellinger opened fire at a rendezvous with FBI agents, who posed as airlines' employees delivering the ransom payment. Dellinger told the jury that he was forced to call the airlines by unidentified persons who threatened to harm his four-year-old son. He said these persons wanted to raise an airlines bomb scare to divert attention from a large narcotics delivery.

San Francisco police yesterday arrested a 21-year-old man for attempted extortion after the allegedly told a telephone operator, "give me $50,000 or I'll blow up another plane."

32 Bahai members arrested in Egypt

CAIRO (Reuter). — Egyptian police have arrested 32 people in the Delta town of Tanta, accusing them of being members of the Bahai religious group, which was officially banned in Egypt last year.

The public prosecutor ordered the group to be remanded indefinitely. The Bahai movement originated in Iran, and has its world headquarters in Haifa.

Turkey seizes 108 kilos of morphine base

ISTANBUL. — Turkish narcotics officers announced on Friday the seizure here of 108 kilos of morphine base, valued at the equivalent of $1,130,000, on the illegal U.S. market.

The narcotics bureau said the seizure was made by officers who began investigations here after the arrest of a Turkish senator in France last week-end and the seizure with him of about 146 kilos of smuggled morphine base. (Reuter, AP)

A 'doomsday' warning for the world

A new U.S. study warns that the world will reach breakdown point within 100 years if man does not begin to think differently about his ideas of technological development.

PROVOCATIVE new study of man's ecological destiny, published last week in the United States, had already touched off a major international polemic among scientists, technologists and industrialists before it came out. "Limits to Growth," as the title indicates, challenges the most basic tenets of economic development which have guided the technologically advanced nations for decades and to which the developing ones aspire.

WASHINGTON

By Sam Lipski

One of the main aims of the study is to get man to think differently about growth, in particular to grasp the concept of exponential, as distinguished from linear, growth. The message is that the Earth's re-creating resources are finite — if governments do not achieve a state of "global equilibrium" between population and capital then Earth will reach breakdown point within the next 100 years — the most probable result will be the sudden collapse of human life from disease and starvation.

Research techniques

The authors readily acknowledge these conclusions, taken on the basis of a study which makes these latest study some 20 years more than another trendy forecast in doomsday futurology is intriguing background to the subject, the research techniques used, and the quite astonishing realization given to the findings even as they were published. Some of the impact its conclusions have already made could be seen last week at a symposium only one of many the study has spawned. Held at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington where Senators, cabinet secretaries, strialists, ambassadors and other dignitaries grappled with the implications of the predicament of mankind.

The scene was altogether appropriate. Under the thrusting Roman columns of the Smithsonian's Great Hall, Dr. Dennis Meadows, a 29-year-old systems analyst, outlined how a project group he directed at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology had constructed a global computer model and then fed it with data on five basic factors that determine growth on this planet: — population increase, agricultural production, non-renewable resources, industrial output and pollution. Meadows' study is the story of how Dr. Meadows came to be there last week goes to 1968 and a 64-year-old businessman, Dr. Aurelio Peccei, is the founder of the Club of Rome, until recently obscure private group of indus-trilists, scientists, and technocrats. Suddenly they have been thrust into the international arena extending an aura of behind-the-scenes power, and influence.

Peccei originally brought together 30 men — the club has since grown to 75 — in an informal organization described as an "invisible college." The purpose was to transcend national boundaries and scientific disciplines and encourage an understanding of the total global system.

They met irregularly in Paris, Rome, Rio de Janeiro, or Moscow, trying to achieve a "leap in inventiveness surpassing conventional wisdom." Their first project looks at the complex of problems troubling all nations: "poverty in the midst of plenty — degradation of the environment — loss of faith in institutions — uncontrolled urban spread — insecurity of employment — alienation of youth — rejection of traditional values — and inflation and other monetary and economic disruptions."

They call all this the "world problematique" a phrase we shall be hearing more about in the years to come. For the Club of Rome, the most striking feature of the divergent parts of the problematique is that they are really not divergent. They have three common characteristics: They occur to some degree in all societies — they contain technical, social, economic and political elements — and, most important of all, they interact.

The real "predicament of mankind" is that man can perceive the problematique, yet, despite his considerable knowledge and skills he does not understand the "origins, significance and interrelationships of its many components and thus is unable to devise effective responses." Mainly this is because we continue to look at single items in the problematique without understanding that "the whole is more than the sum of its parts, that change in one element means change in the others."

But how to measure all this? This is where the Club of Rome claims to have made its decisive contribution. It commissioned phase one — the application of systems analysis to man's eco-system. Led by Dr. Meadows the M.I.T. project team used a 16-man international staff and the expertise developed by Professor Jay Forrester, the doyen of systems dynamics at M.I.T., to prepare a mathematical approximation, or model, of the global system. After 18 months, a period which has seen a notable change in general awareness of ecology, the results are available in "The Limits of Growth."

PARADISE WITHOUT PROGRESS: Bora Bora, in French Polynesia, is one of the most beautiful spots in the world. It has hardly been touched by modern-day "progress." (Camera Press)

At a scientific symposium in Rome recently the study was described as a breakthrough for civilization of the order of the French Encyclopedia of the 18th century. But it has also been scathingly attacked as crude, unscientific, and essentially biased in its basic assumptions. The critics, unimpressed with the computer mystique, point out that systems analysis is just another research tool, only as good as its users.

'Stupid but loyal'

Peccei and Meadows acknowledge their model is still a primitive one but they claim a beginning has been made. The computer "stupid but loyal," has been asked complex global questions and has come up with disturbing answers.

It may be, Peccei allows, that the study gave insufficient weight to the potential science and technology have for solving some of the problems they have created — it may be that there are more raw materials than assumed — and it may even be that the model fed to the computer was too "technocratic," ignoring the impact of different value systems on changes in human society.

But the majority view in the Club is that while a full debate on all these reservations is essential none of the above-mentioned developments would do very much more than delay the demographic or environmental disaster. "The problematique consists of issues that require more than technical solutions."

What is needed, the Club says, is nothing less than "the initiation of new forms of thinking that will lead to a fundamental revision of human behaviour and, by implication, of the entire fabric of present-day society."

There are really two separate questions at stake. Are Meadows and his computers right? Assuming they are, or might be, how does a world committed to the notions of "progress" and "growth" make the transition in time?

Rich-poor gap

Finding the answers for the second question is the Club's phase 2 — a much harder one because it goes to the heart of the great gap between rich and poor nations. At last week's Smithsonian symposium the Ambassador of India, L.K. Jha, pointed out a basic concern. The state of equilibrium sought by the Club of Rome was all very well — but unless it was accompanied by an equalization of income it might mean the poorer nations would slide down to starvation or break up in revolution, civil strife and war.

But Meadows was adamant: "The fundamental question is whether the distribution problem is more likely to be solved by current practice than by moving into equilibrium."

U.S. envoy flies to Paris for talks with China

PARIS (Reuters). — U.S. Ambassador Arthur Watson flew back to Paris yesterday from Washington to open formal diplomatic contacts — mainly on trade and travel — with China's envoy here, Huang Chen.

American officials said they had no precise information about the date or place of the first meeting. But Mr. Watson is expected to have his first meeting with Mr. Huang soon, possibly during the coming week.

White House spokesman Ronald Ziegler said reports at a Friday press conference that Paris had been selected because it was convenient to both countries. He stressed that the selection of the French Capital was not made because it could serve as a contact point for Vietnam.

Danger of air pollution magnified

UNITED NATIONS (UPI). — A top scientist of the World Health Organization (WHO) on Thursday downgraded the fatal threat of air pollution—especially of carbon monoxide and lead fumes from gasoline consumption.

Dr. Martin Kaplan, head of WHO's Science and Technology division, also defended the insecticide D.D.T. and played down the deadly dread of smog.

Kaplan told a news conference WHO hoped the June environment conference at Stockholm would concentrate on environmental monitoring, creation of international standards for healthy atmosphere and increased global research.

Kaplan, who is a specialist in virus research at Philadelphia's Wistar Institute, said the U.S. had set such high standards of testing for food and atmospheric purity that the rest of the world could not afford to live up to them.

"Carbon monoxide and lead in the air have been proven not fatal over a long period in some countries," he said. But he added that the results of research were not necessarily conclusive.

The automobile

"The automobile is a relatively new thing," Dr. Kaplan said. "It has been around only about 50 years. So is the cigarette, it took 25 years to discover the lung mortalities occurring from them."

Dr. Kaplan pointed to the polluted atmosphere in Britain — and the famous "peasoup" fogs of London — that came with the industrial revolution.

"I don't want to deprecate smog," he said, "but I know of only three major incidents. Pittsburgh was cleaned up beautifully. So was London—you wouldn't recognize it now from what it was in 1952. But many countries cannot afford the smoke eliminators and equipment to clean up an industrial atmosphere."

The instances Dr. Kaplan cited for major smogs resulting in fatalities were at Donora, Pennsylvania in the late 1940s, the Meuse Valley, in France in the 1930s, and London in 1952.

"There is no question that under certain conditions when there is a build-up of toxic elements, such as sulphur dioxide and others, in the air, susceptible people will die," he said.

Not over-dangerous

"Air pollution and dirty air is a nuisance — it makes your shirts dirty. But ordinarily, in many cities it is not over-dangerous. Air pollution is almost negligible compared with the dangers in food and water."

Defending the use of D.D.T., the insecticide that recently has come under attack in the U.S. and elsewhere, Dr. Kaplan said: D.D.T. has shown in lab tests that it can produce tumours in certain circumstances. But in 20 years, we have found no evidence of disease resulting from the use of D.D.T. on a normal level.

"If the WHO stopped spraying with D.D.T., the results would be catastrophic. It was shown in Ceylon that when D.D.T. spraying was stopped, there was a recrudescence of malaria."

Kaplan agreed that D.D.T. used in excess could be dangerous. "But if you eat enough salt, it will poison you, too," he said.

THE SADDEST CASUALTY OF MART WRANGLE

THE saddest casualty of the Common Market wrangle that looks like occupying the British Parliament into the summer must be Ray Gunter, a former Labour Cabinet Minister who has broken with his party and now threatens to resign his seat in the Commons.

Gunter, who has long been active in the "Labour Friends of Israel," is the son of a Welsh miner and used to be president of the railway clerks' union. In 1960, when he was plucked from an obscure seat on the Labour executive to present the policy document "Signposts for the 'Sixties'" to the party conference, he was hailed as a coming proletarian leader of the British Left.

He was appointed Minister of Labour in Harold Wilson's 1964 Government, and developed an almost masochistic affection for what he called "this bed of nails." The Ministry gave him a chance to preach and to fight, both of which he relished. But his attachment to this Ministry also reflected a recognition of his own limits.

When Wilson moved him — because he needed the Ministry for someone else — Gunter was heartbroken. He stayed for a while at his new post, the Ministry of Power, but soon resigned to return to "the people whence I came." He always felt that the party had drifted away from him, but the truth is that he, too, had moved steadily to the right. He accepted company directorships. He supported the Conservative Industrial Relations Act that limited the scope of the trade unions.

Ray Gunter

Last year his wife died, and he has had less and less appetite for politics ever since. The party Whips had written him off long ago. Only the friendship of the Chief Whip, Bob Mellish, who represents an adjoining London dockland constituency, saved him from disciplinary action.

Ironically, the break has finally come over the Common Market. Gunter is a veteran supporter of British entry and sees no reason to change course now. Labour, on the other hand, has gone into ever more painful contortions to justify its opposition less than five years after Wilson's Government was trying to lead the country along the same path. At 62, resignation marks the end of Ray Gunter's political career. Hardly anyone seems to have noticed.

The crisis in Anglo-Jewry

THE paper crisis in the Board of Deputies of British Jews, the "Parliament" of Anglo-Jewry, seems to have resolved itself into a conflict between the two ends and the middle. The struggle was originally over the degree of recognition the board should accord the rabbis of the Reform and Liberal congregations. It has been given a new twist by an argument over the status of Progressive marriages.

The board decided to submit a memorandum to the Government Law Commission's working party on the performing of marriages. It included a sentence recording that "in some sections of the community" marriage practices contained "minor variations" which did not "affect the (halachic) principles involved."

A safeguard

Although the Chief Rabbi and the Zakam, his Sephardic counterpart, have both claimed that the contentious passage refers to Orthodox congregations, it was in fact proposed by a vice-president of the Union of Liberal and Progressive Synagogues deliberately to safeguard the Progressive position.

The result has been a new and more bitter row with even less chance for a lasting compromise on the controversial Clause 43 of the Board of Deputies' constitution. It has, though, had the curious effect of bringing the ultra-Orthodox and the Progressives in closer alliance. Both are demanding the deletion of Clause 43, which vests religious authority over the Jewish community in the Orthodox chief rabbis.

THE MECHANICS OF WAGE INFLATION

Economic Editor MOSHE ATER discusses the implications of wage rises to an economy. He refers particularly to the significance of the recent strike of British miners and the demands of Israel bakers.

THE British miners' strike of 1926 made economic history by putting paid to trade unionist hopes of improving the people's lot by peaceful class struggle.

At its old price. The Coal Board and the economists argued that miners' wages should not go up because that would be the death-blow to coal's competitive power.

they will soon find themselves having to resume their fight for a decent living. One might argue that the miners are a "special case" not because of the hardships involved in their work, but owing to their economic strength.

Extra £1 per ton The strike was declared because the miners' union insisted on a wage rise which would have meant an additional cost of £120m. a year (i.e. almost £1 for every ton of coal produced).

Affects production Moreover, Britain's economic recovery and the resumption of full employment obviously depend on its competitive position in the world market.

Another special feature of this story is its international aspect. An important argument used to support the miners' case was the alleged need to maintain Britain's power supply — at whatever cost — independent of Arab oil, whose supply can be stopped at a moment's notice for political reasons.

Strikers untouchable The miners were granted that much because it became evident that they are able to ransom the nation, as long as the government is not ready, and the public not willing, to act against strikers.

Similar development There is no need to point out the similarity between developments in Britain and in this country. It extends to the suggestion now being discussed there of avoiding the adverse effects of a rise in the coal prices by subsidizing the Coal Board — just as we are asked to subsidize the price of bread, in order to allow the bakers to get a 50 per cent wage increase.

Station will be ready in June WORLD TIE-UP VIA SATELLITE

By DAVID LENNON Jerusalem Post Economic Reporter ISRAEL'S ground satellite telecommunications station will go into operation in June this year, and by next summer will have added 300 channels to Israel's links with the western world.

The new station, through the satellite situated 40,000 kilometers away over the Atlantic equatorial region, will provide a direct link with the U.S. and Canada, and seven European countries.

The ground station will transmit and receive calls and broadcasts through the Atlantic satellite of the Intelsat global communications satellite system. Some 80 per cent of the work of the station will be concerned with telephone, telex and telegraph transmissions.

When the new station becomes operational, Israel will be joining an expanding club of operators of ground stations. At present there are 39 countries with 52 stations who already use the Intelsat system.

TV signals One special channel will be reserved for the transmission of television signals — both in colour and black and white. This should mean that the news on our television will be able to show more up-to-date tapes of events abroad, and that stations overseas will be able to receive more immediate tapes from Israel.

One of largest Israel's station will be one of the largest in operation, the fourth largest in the number of channels, and the 11th or 12th largest in the volume of traffic which it carries, Mr. Soroker claimed.

The year 1975 will mark a watershed in international communications for Israel. It is planned that by then all the 500 channels of the satellite ground station will be in operation, and even more important, that is the year which the Ministry of Communications plans to introduce direct dialling overseas for every phone subscriber in Israel.

The cost of the whole project will be IL50m. when completed. The annual income from the operation of the station should be in the region of IL200m., and a rough estimate of operating costs is somewhere in the region of IL50m. However, this simple picture doesn't actually mean that the station will make a profit of IL150m. a year, as there are also the costs of the local network to be taken into account, and while the station will justify its establishment in economic terms as well as in telecommunications terms, it is not likely to become the nation's largest money spinning project.

SOVIET SETTLERS & ISRAEL POLITICS

The average immigrant from the Soviet Union is wary of Israeli politics and hesitates to commit himself to any political party. Two exceptions are Boris Kotschubievski, who joined Herut soon after his arrival, and Dov (Grischa) Feigin, who became a member of the Labour Party within a year.

THE typical attitude of Soviet immigrants to Israeli political parties is: "We are newcomers, we haven't studied the issue yet. We'll see how they will vote in the next elections, most newcomers assume blank expression as if cornered; the more informed might reply, 'Well it's a long time to elections. We'll decide when they come.'"

The reason for this reaction is obvious to any observer of the Soviet regime. "The Party" is an ominous phrase, evoking associations of a juggernaut never-machines-rustling all opposition. The best way to avoid its impact is to stay out of its way.

The complexity of the Israeli political set-up is another confusing factor: joining a party in Israel is like deciding on the community in which one will live.

In the minds of Russian Jews, Israel is thought of as a great body of men, all devoted to the task of building their ancient Fatherland.

He was interned for three years, and only arrived here recently. His parents were shot in Babai Yarkoslav among non-Jews, he is orthodox and felt himself to be wholly Jewish.

Mr. Kotschubievski reasons that socialist ideology, which impelled so many of the founders of the Zionist movement to action, has undergone considerable changes in the past 50 years.

"Because the regime which was responsible for their miseries in Russia is called socialist, most Russian immigrants are strongly anti-socialist, without even giving thought to what the word means."

In Israel, they find a society imbued with ideals which were prevalent in Russia in the early 1920s. But when they are told that position parties exist and may not be without danger to themselves, the newcomers believe that it is either eye-wash or hypocrisy.

A psychological block prevents them from taking part in political life. But we are the same sort of Jews who arrived in this country at the turning of the century. We have heroes in our blood. One day it will awaken.

Why did Boris Kotschubievski himself not hesitate to join a political party? Because he feels he is a pioneer.

"I was the first in Russia to see that Israel was my home," he thinks that war was virtually over for Israel for the foreseeable future, and that the individual will free to exercise his natural de-

AN ELECTRIC HAZARD FOR CHILDREN

LAW REPORT section with text: In the Supreme Court Sitting As Court of Civil Appeals Before Justices Berenson, Witkon and Masny.

The Supreme Court partly allowed an appeal against a judgment of the Tel Aviv District Court, delivered on June 18, 1970 (in C.C. 5166/68).

On their way to school the next morning, a group of children were attracted to the pile and started clambering over it. The poles, which were not tied together, became dislodged and the pile toppled down, causing the death of one child and injuring several others.

The respondent sued the Electric Corporation for damages in the Tel Aviv District Court, which found that the Corporation's foreman had been negligent in that he had failed to take precautionary measures, and awarded the respondent IL45,000 compensation.

In the appeal to the Supreme Court, Mr. B. Gross appeared for the appellant and Mr. I. Yakichowsky for the respondent.

Justice Berenson, who delivered the judgment of the Supreme Court, noted that as the accident had occurred in 1961 the law applicable to it was section 50(2) of the Civil Wrongs Ordinance, before the amendment in 1970 which repealed the three-fold differentiation between invitees, bare licensees and trespassers.

The appellants had argued, he continued, that, as the respondent was a trespasser, they owed him no duty even to warn him of any hidden peril (such duty being owed under section 50(2) to a bare licensee only) and that the only duty they had towards him was that of refraining to act with reckless disregard of his safety in the knowledge of his presence on their property.

However, Justice Berenson held, the duty which the appellants had had towards the respondent was not the duty of the owner or occupier of immovable property towards a trespasser (this duty, incidentally, he pointed out, being far more extensive than as defined by the appellants), because the pile of

THE $7,000 TO FIGHT BARBIE

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — I have read many stories in The Jerusalem Post about the efforts of Mrs. Klarfeld to obtain the extradition of Klaus Altmann (possibly Barbie) from Bolivia.

I hereby pledge my pay check from the Weizmann Institute for one month towards this cause, in the hope that others will follow suit, and contribute money to raise the sum needed for Mrs. Klarfeld.

I would hope that The Jerusalem Post could act as the collecting agent for these monies and could transmit them to the cause of Mrs. Klarfeld.

A lost musical culture revived

Jewish Soul Music

"Jewish Soul Music," a programme of Jewish folk music, was presented by Giora Feldman, clarinet; Yosi Levy, classical guitar and Joel Frenkel, bass guitar (Tasvita, Tel Aviv, March 6).

Generations of Jewish musicians and listeners have poured out their hearts on the violin. Giora Feldman does it on the clarinet and the bass-clarinet. With great understanding, love and tenderness he revives a world of Jewish musical culture lost in the Holocaust.

But it is not only the emotional involvement of Feldman which made this programme a fascinating spiritual experience. Feldman is an excellent clarinetist and whatever he plays is first-rate musicianship. He has also found the right musical framework to present this material. It is authentic and yet carefully adapted to modern taste, but avoids any form of cheap commercialization. The whole programme has real style and decorum.

Accompanied by his two assistants on the guitar, Giora Feldman presented two hours of arresting Jewish soul music.

The second half of the evening was taken up by the presentation of Pergolesi's opera buffa "La Serva Padrona," a classic in the light genre from the early 18th century.

Yochanan Kaldi complemented the proceedings with very attractive contributions from the harpsichord, and the string ensemble fulfilled its task splendidly.

If the hall were given a more sophisticated colour scheme, the atmosphere would be more conducive to the enjoyment of music.

The debut of the ensemble was most encouraging and a further rise in standards can be expected.

Phone talks with soldiers

TEL AVIV. — Soldiers on the borders will be brought in touch with their parents by telephone in a new weekly programme to be presented by Galei Zahal.

The programme will be presented by the head of the Army Radio station, Mr. Yitzhak Livni, who gave details of the new broadcasting schedule for Galei Zahal which starts on April 1.

Among other new weekly features are "Little People" — kindergarten children talking on problems of security, politics, current affairs and about themselves; and "Chef Nicolai prepares battle rations" — the radio chef will offer home cuisine recipes based on the list of food available in army camps on the day of his broadcast.

New chamber orchestra

The Jerusalem Chamber Orchestra, directed by Shimon Mishari (Ben-Dan University, March 6), has presented a programme of chamber music.

The programme included: Concerto for Harp and Strings in B-flat (Wilhelmine Bucherer, Harp); Handel: Passacaglia; Pergolesi: "La Serva Padrona," opera buffa (Yehudit Alexandroni, soprano; Freddy Feller, bass; Yochanan Kaldi, harpsichord).

Curiously enough the newly-organized Jerusalem Chamber Ensemble (part of the Israel Broadcasting Symphony Orchestra) made its debut outside the Capital. Its personnel has no resemblance to that of its predecessor, which broke up some years ago (for budgetary reasons it was said at the time).

After only a few months of rehearsing the group has already acquired homogeneity and considerable precision. Helped by the friendly acoustics, the 11 musicians developed rich sound and an "elastic" delivery, presenting a charming symphony by Sammartini (1700-1775) in lively performance.

Wilhelmine Bucherer played the solo part in Handel's Harp Concerto in straightforward manner and got prolonged applause from the big audience.

A well-prepared rendition of the Passacaglia in G minor by Handel — in a stylistically dubious arrangement by some unnamed "improver" — was skilfully presented. The ensemble should beware of prolonging final chords unduly, for which there is no justification.

Mr. Steinberg received warm applause, which he well deserved, not only for his composition and his extremely beautiful playing, but also for the care he had obviously lavished on the Quartet — led by Annette Samuels — whose playing displayed true emotional feeling.

Meeting of Moslem Foreign Ministers

WORDS WITHOUT ANY ACTION

Representatives of 31 Moslem states have just ended the third Pan-Islamic Conference. ZVI BEN-AVRAHAM considers the conference and the reasons for the repeated failure of attempts at a meaningful alignment.

"THE deliberations of the Conference of Foreign Ministers of Moslem States held recently in Jeddah remind us of many conferences and meetings, Arab and Moslem, which have taken place in years gone by and ended without any results. Arab and Moslem nations have grown used to conferences where deliberations take place, and statements are issued, couched in terms which cover up all the conflicts (between states); and at the end all the participants return to their own countries without the smallest part of what has been resolved being put into practice."

Faisal of Saudi Arabia... unsuccessful attempt to achieve Moslem unity.

This comment on the Jeddah Conference did not emanate from a source hostile to the Arab cause. It was part of an editorial in the March 3 issue of "El-Kuds", the Jerusalem Arabic newspaper. It expresses the scepticism which people in Arab and Moslem countries feel towards the various pan-Islamic conferences and meetings which have been held periodically since the early thirties. Arabs and Moslems themselves believe these affairs to be without any practical significance and influence, and history too has shown them to be so. Their only significance has been of the propaganda plane and this too has been limited to one issue, Israel. And even here the wester of repetitive resolutions are beginning to lose their limited effect.

As might have been expected, this last conference at Jeddah, which was attended by representatives of 31 Moslem states (only half of them actually foreign ministers) also passed a series of sharply-worded resolutions condemning Israel and Zionism. These included calls for Israel to withdraw from the administered territories and for economic and political measures to be taken against her. There was also a decision to establish a jihād fund to aid the Moslem war effort against Israel. It was typical that this conference, like similar conferences in the past, achieved unity almost only over the question of Israel, although it is still unclear what the position was of those states such as Turkey, Iran, and various African states, which maintain formal and practical relations with Israel. In similar fashion in the past, these countries have taken a balanced stand and tried to blunt the edge of extremist anti-Israel resolutions, or, failing that, refused to lend their support to such resolutions.

No decision on bank

The conference was unable to adopt any resolutions on subjects far more important than Israel to the development and well-being of a great many Moslem countries, subjects far better suited to test the justification and possible benefits of pan-Islamism — such as the plan to set up an Islamic Development Bank whose assets would be made up of contributions from the wealthier Moslem nations and whose purpose would be to aid development projects in the poorer ones. Despite much discussion on this subject before the conference, a decision was postponed once again.

Matter of prestige

The kings of Saudi Arabia continue to see their control of the Moslem holy places at Mecca and Medina as an important factor in raising their prestige — something they sorely need, at least in the Moslem world. The meetings of Moslem leaders which take place in Saudi Arabia each year during the Haj season have not developed any formal structure and imply no binding commitment on the participants, and they have no especially important pan-Islamic significance.

Attempts which have been made to move the Islamic states towards some form of economic cooperation, based on the premise that the rich countries are duty-bound to aid the poorer ones, have also met with a poor response. Several pan-Islamic economic conferences have been held and ended with nothing achieved — the same fate as that of the proposal for an Islamic Development Bank mentioned earlier.

To complete the picture it should be pointed out that certain pan-Islamic cultural activities do take place from time to time, but these remain strictly within the cultural ambit, and no all-Moslem unity is likely to arise from them.

One of the main causes for the repeated failures of attempts at a meaningful pan-Islamic alignment of Moslem states has always been — and still is — the many conflicts of interest between the various states which have arisen at different times: between Egypt and Saudi Arabia, between Egypt and Iraq, between the "revolutionary"

Arab and Moslem countries behind her in her struggle against India. Her hopes were soon dashed, and Pakistan very quickly ceased her activities, which had been aimed at the creation of an official pan-Islamic organization, although she continued to permit various unofficial and unimportant activities in the religious and cultural spheres. The pan-Islamic societies founded in Pakistan at that time largely died away; those which survived are somnolent.

'League of Nations'

In 1961, the Malaysian leader Tunku Abdul Rahman proposed that a "League of Moslem Nations" be established. This too raised only the faintest support, and was soon dropped. The pan-Islamic conference which the Tunku called in his capital eight years later was a one-time affair without any continuation.

Very few people know anything of the activities of an unofficial pan-Islamic organization in Indonesia in recent years. It has held two conferences, but they had no real impact whatever — not even as propaganda exercises.

Abdul Nasser saw in pan-Islamic activities a useful lever both for increasing his influence in the orbit of Moslem affairs and in his struggle against the Moslem Brotherhood at home. All the religious instructors and functionaries which Egypt sent out to Moslem countries were not in fact intended to promote the idea of a pan-Islamic political framework, which Egypt neither believed in nor desired, but solely to advance the interests and influence of Nasserite Egypt. Anwar Sadat, on the other hand, has no pan-Islamic aspirations, and he makes do with sending delegates to pan-Islamic conferences and supporting resolutions which do not conflict with Egyptian interests, and anti-Israel resolutions.

states and the "conservative" ones, between states with widely differing approaches towards the Soviet Union, and so on. It is by no means coincidental that all official pan-Islamic conferences whose basis is the religious common denominator of participants refrain from discussing — or taking stands on — Soviet penetration and Communist influence in Arab countries, which many Moslem religious thinkers consider as deadly a danger to Islam as the "Zionist danger." It is similarly significant that these pan-Islamic conferences refrain from directly condemning Western imperialism as they once did.

Basis of unity

It seems that there is only one subject on which the Moslem states are prepared to come together and pass unanimous resolutions — their hostility to Israel. And indeed it was politico-propaganda activities against Israel which periodically breathed life into the pan-Islamic movement and enabled it to cover up the conflicts and divisions which prevented true unity. This anti-Israel motivation received added impetus after the Six Day War with the Moslem holy places in Jerusalem returning to Jewish sovereignty. It was characteristic that the Akse fire was enough to bring about a summit conference of 25 Moslem heads of state which had seemed virtually impossible before that incident. It was this summit conference which resulted in three subsequent meetings of Moslem foreign ministers — the last of which was the Jeddah conference just ended, and in the creation of a permanent Moslem Secretariat.

However, it has quickly become apparent, as was foreseeable, that the fate of this latest effort at pan-Islamism will be similar to that of its predecessors.

By Catherine Rosenheimer Jerusalem Post Fashion Reporter

TEL AVIV. — With Japan's retail ladies fashion turnover currently standing at a billion yen annually — around $1 billion — it is hardly surprising that Israeli fashion exporters are interested in increasing their sales, however minimal, in this mammoth market.

In October of this year, a delegation of Israeli ready-to-wear manufacturers will be holding a promotion in Tokyo for the first time. Also planned for the autumn is an Israel Week to be held in Tokyo's biggest and most prestigious department store, Mitsukoshi — part of an 11-store chain throughout Japan, patronized by the Royal family and renowned for the best quality gifts to be found anywhere in the country.

Mr. Hirokazu Ishio recently spent a fortnight in Israel in a dual capacity: he is creative director of Creative Board International of Tokyo and was accompanying Mitsukoshi's general merchandising manager as marketing and sales promotion adviser. In addition to

New Zealand court summons for naughty word

(UPI). — ULTRA-feminist Dr. Germaine Greer received a police summons to appear in court to answer complaints she used an indecent word while addressing a mass meeting at the Town Hall early last week.

Greer was ordered to appear in court to answer the summons which police said had to be issued under the law after members of the public made a formal complaint.

Police charged that the word Dr. Greer used was "bullshit."

Undeterred by the summons, Greer used the same word at a public meeting again last Wednesday and then called on members of the audience to repeat it after her, they did, with a mass shout.

Greer, author of the best-selling book "The Female Eunuch," is on a New Zealand speaking tour under the sponsorship of an Auckland newspaper, the "Sunday Herald." She was scheduled to leave the country yesterday.

A young radical, Tim Shadbolt, was convicted on a similar charge and sentenced to several weekends of detention on default on a 100 New Zealand dollars (about $150) fine.

Observers said it was possible that Shadbolt supporters had made the complaints against Greer in order to test the validity of the law.

Greer, now lecturing at London University, said everyone in her country used the objected to word.

HEAVENLY KITCHEN

By Nancy Ward LONDON (FWF). — THE most heavenly kitchen ever designed has just been completed. But, oddly, it has been designed by men, for men.

It has the most fantastic labour-saving devices ever dreamed up, and if you think the whole thing sounds too good for this earth — then you are right. This super-kitchen is not destined for earth, but for space. It will be used by the crew of America's first space station, which, it is expected, will hover high above our world, about five years from now.

In this celestial, super-luxurious galley, every inch of space has been brilliantly utilized. Besides the labour-saving devices such as washing-up machines and waste-disposal units, there is a kitchen computer set into one wall. Press a button or two and the computer can flash to the screen any one of hundreds of recipes. Another couple of flicks at the controls and the computer will tell exactly what food is in the larder and which stocks are in short supply.

Why on earth is such a marvelous kitchen destined for the use of men high in space and not for housewives down here below? It is, I think, because only when men have to do housework do they ever think about what a hard job housewives have.

Hard job

Most men will not agree that housework is a really hard job. However, from now on men who think housewives have it easy may have to revise their opinion. Because now there is at least one man in the world who is on our side. A Frankfurt psychoanalyst, Doctor Ernest Bornemann, says that housework is, without doubt, the hardest job in the world. "If a woman's place is in the home," says the doctor, "then her job is harder than her husband's. Help your wife as often as possible with the housework," urges Doctor Bornemann. "Then you will have some idea of just how dull her job can be." He believes that housewives really suffer from the dreary repetition of tasks around the house. It is work, he says, that never ends — treadmill stuff. Doctor Bornemann However, the most fulsome praise in the world can never alter the fact that housework, according to Doctor Bornemann's thesis, is the world's hardest labour.

Maxim's loose red crown

PARIS (Reuter). — MAXIM'S — probably the most favoured restaurant in France — has lost its place among the finest gastronomic tables in the country, according to a leading food guide to be published here shortly.

A spokesman for the Guide Kleber said today that two other famous Paris restaurants — Fouquet's on the Champs Elysees and Drouant where the Goncourt literary prize is awarded annually — had also been downgraded in the latest edition of the guide due to be published this month.

Maxim's, celebrated for its distinguished clientele and art nouveau decor as well as for its food, used to win a red cock topped by a red crown in the Guide Kleber. This singled it out as "one of the finest tables of France."

This year it loses the crown and is left with only the red cock, reducing it to the status of "an elegant restaurant."

The Guide Kleber, the number-two restaurant guide in France after the Guide Michelin, emerged as a source of famous eating places last year when it reduced its rating of four celebrated Paris restaurants — La Tour d'Argent, Le Doyen, Fenier and Le Coucou.

Its decision this year did not seem to shake Maxim's, which has a maximum three stars in the Guide Michelin. A restaurant spokesman said: "This leaves me completely unconcerned."

Drouant, an elegant restaurant famous for its fish and white wines, was demoted this year from a red cock to a white cock which denotes "a classic restaurant."

Fouquet's, celebrated for its terraces spilling out onto the pavement of the Champs Elysees, suffered the same fate while a well-known brasserie backed by the Rothschilds, the Brasserie Botinger, was dropped from the Kleber guide completely.

The Guide spokesman gave no reasons for the demotions.

Air Piracy

DAVAR (Histadrut), discussing the issue of air piracy, believes that the leniency with which governments and airlines have reacted to acts of hijacking has encouraged terrorism in the air. "Only an international convention against the airborne extortion, which has become fashionable, is likely to put an end to acts of piracy and terrorism," the paper concludes.

Ha'aretz (Non-Party) prefers to the young student from BeerSheva who recently shouted, "We do not agree that immigration should be at our expense." The paper asks the student: "at whose expense does she think it ought to be? there are no grounds here for self-pity. We receive aid from the diaspora to absorb immigration, and an American Jew would be entitled to say to the student in BeerSheva that she may live in Israel if she wishes, but not at his expense."

Hamaedia (Agudat Yisrael) asks where this ill-will came from. "Apparently, its source lies in a moral anarchy and disintegration which characterizes this generation, which has abandoned Jewish tradition."

Three top Nat'l League teams lose to giant killers

Jerusalem Post Reporter
TEL AVIV. — In the final National League soccer matches before the "Rangoon recess," the top three teams all lost matches yesterday to three giant killers.

Tel Aviv U. wallops Hebrew U. in rugby

By JACK LEON
Jerusalem Post Sports Reporter
Tel Aviv University humbled the Hebrew University with a resounding 27-6 victory in Jerusalem yesterday in the first national rugby football league match in the Capital. Among the spectators at the National University stadium was Dr. Danie Craven, President of the South African Rugby Board, who is visiting at the invitation of the newly established Israel Rugby Union.

Showing much more stamina in the hot sunshine, Tel Aviv, well led by Olive Gurwitz, dominated all departments of the game, scoring four goals and a penalty to one goal as they inflicted their first defeat of the season on the Hebrew University. The game was excellently refereed by Norman Cox.

The visitors' tries were scored by Frank Forwards Kaplan and Gold, and Camron (2), who had a great game in company with his fellow three-quarters Frysh, Ferrari and Goldstein. Also in top form were Tel Aviv's two former Rumanian internationals, Nagel at scrum-half and prop Rosenberg, who was successful with two conversions and a superb 40-metre penalty. The other tries were converted by Gold and Frysh.

Jerusalem, handicapped by the absence of several key players, were served by loose forwards Stillerman and Herman, and their captain, Barry Judelman, appearing in the unfamiliar position of centre three-quarter. Their consolation try was scored by winger Segal, with Judelman adding the points.

Moshav parents threatened with excommunication
ACRE — Parents in Moshav Ahidud in Western Galilee have been threatened with excommunication if they send their children to a state secular school, instead of the moshav's state religious school.

Several families in the moshav, allegedly dissatisfied with the religious school, which has 300 pupils, decided to send their children to the regional school in Regba, and one parent has already done so. Religious leaders of the moshav, headed by Rabbi Shaul Hacoen, reacted by posting a declaration calling for the excommunication of such parents and anyone who aids them.

The parents involved have referred the matter to the authorities, and are studying the feasibility of going to court.

B.L.L. absorbs Haifa credit society
Jerusalem Post Reporter
HAIFA — Bank Leumi and Bank Hapoalim have come to an agreement on their competitive takeover bids for the Halva's Vehisshon Credit Society, with 11 branches throughout the greater Haifa area, Tiv'on and Tirat Carmel.

In a report leaked by bank officials on Friday, it was announced that Bank Leumi will take over the 11 branches with their small, financially insignificant banking business and their staff of 80. In return, Bank Hapoalim will get six permits for branch offices here or elsewhere. The Labour Council will now withdraw its legal objection to the merger.

Some months ago, the Governor of the Bank of Israel, Mr. Moshe Sanbar, expressed his dissatisfaction with the administrative shortcomings of the 50-year-old, small mutual credit society, with a membership of about 20,000. He prescribed a merger with one of the larger banks. As these can get no new licenses for opening urban branches except in development areas, the final bidding was between Bank Leumi and Bank Hapoalim.

The staff of a man opted for Bank Leumi. Pay and other working conditions are by about 50 per cent better than those of Bank Hapoalim. Labour Council Secretary Eliezer Molk sought, however, to preserve the credit society for "the labour camp and for Haifa." He even obtained a court injunction against a 5:4 Management Board decision to join B.L.L.

He even promised the staff committee of the credit society working conditions similar to those of Bank Leumi (far better than those of Bank Hapoalim), and of a nature which is reported to have stunned the latter's staff of over 2,000 at what would have amounted to preferred status for the 80 Haifa employees.

400 marchers arrive from Switzerland

Jerusalem Post Reporter
A special El Al jumbo flight from Switzerland arrived at Lod Airport last night carrying 400 of the 830 Swiss participants in the Three-Day March. The March will be held March 20-22.

Switzerland this year is sending the largest number of overseas marchers, and some 350 of them were recruited through a campaign in one of the major Swiss supermarket chains. The Israel Government Tourist Office in Switzerland suggested that the supermarket "Coop" sponsor the marchers, and in return the Coop advertised the march through their chain, and registered those interested.

Mr. Moshe Shoshani, Director of the Overseas Offices Division of the Tourism Ministry, explained that this is the first year that the Ministry has taken charge of the foreign marchers. One result has been a doubling of the number of visiting participants to about 1,300.

Both Denmark and the U.S. are sending around 150 participants. The U.S. group includes a contingent of Jewish policemen from New York, one of whom is a 26-year-old woman detective.

Germany is sending 80 people, including a group of 22 post office workers from Berlin. Holland, the land of the Nijmegen March, will be represented by 18 enthusiasts, and Norway is sending an army group of 30. From Argentina has come a 61-year-old dentist, Dr. Juan Zweigenthal.

In all, some 16 countries will be represented among the foreign participants, Finland and Japan will be represented by citizens who are currently here either studying or working at a kibbutz.

2,000 follow in David's footsteps
Jerusalem Post Reporter
Two thousand people yesterday participated in the King David March, from Gilo (Beit Jala) near Bethlehem, to the Valley of Elah, where David fought Goliath. The marchers' route was 28 km.

An 18 km. race from Mevo Betar to the Valley was won by 35-year-old Gavriel Cohen, of Kibbutz Yad Mordechai, in a field of 10 competitors.

The march's award went to an Aircraft Industries group. Bank Leumi had the largest number of participants. The events were organized by the National Maccabi Centre.

Housing industry too 'conservative'—Sharef
Jerusalem Post Reporter
HAIFA — The provision of housing in Israel is constantly falling behind the demand because of the slow pace of construction and rising costs. This was stated here on Friday by Housing Minister Ze'ev Sharef, speaking to a group of engineers, architects and building contractors.

The time it took to finish homes was steadily increasing, the Minister said. Work had started on 35,000 homes in 1969, 42,000 in 1970 and 44,000 in 1971. But the number of those completed in these years were only 26,000, 31,000 and 23,000 respectively.

In the next five years we shall need 290,000 new flats at a total cost of IL20,000m., Mr. Sharef said. The forecast takes into account the needs of young couples, shom clearance programmes, and replacing dangerous structures. To that one should add the needs for additional office space, schools and other essential facilities.

At the same time, the cost of building was rising faster than the general cost of living, Mr. Sharef said. The C-o-L index had risen by 6.1 per cent in 1970 and by 12.9 per cent in 1971, while the price of flats had gone up by 17.5 per cent in 1970 and by 28.9 per cent last year.

Mr. Sharef attributed the situation to the conservative character of the building industry. "There was almost no change in basic technology since the times of the Romans until the discovery of reinforced concrete, and there has been virtually none since."

The solution lay partly in modular building, relying on factory-made parts, Mr. Sharef said. "There is no reason why staircases or kitchen walls with all the installations built-in should not be supplied ready-made by factories where the work is done cheaper and faster. The fewer workmen enter a home after the skeleton is built the cheaper and sooner it will be finished."

He said that the transfer of permits already approved, and the not creation of new ones, Mr. Sharef explained to The Jerusalem Post yesterday.

NORTHERN BORDER TAKES GETTING USED TO

By YAACOV FRIEDLER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

KIRYAT SHMONA — "It's a sad situation, but you get used to it," Mrs. Hana Sabti, a young mother of a small boy, summed up on Friday the attitude of people living along the northern border. "We just carry on and try to ignore the shelling," she added in comment on the past fortnight of terrorist attacks and I.D.F. countermeasures.

Mrs. Sabti, who came originally from a small New Jersey town, has been living here for nearly three years. She is married to an Iraqi immigrant and teaches English at the local religious high school.

She invited us into their first floor flat in a block of buildings along the highroad, which she was just making ready for the Sabbath. "At first we used to be scared. But now I can't even remember exactly when the last Katyusha fell. I think it was about a fortnight ago," she said.

"Difficult? Well, it's not what we were used to in New Jersey, but after two years even my parents have got used to it. They used to phone the Israel Embassy every time a Katyusha fell in Kiryat Shmona. Now they just write me a letter."

Her one complaint was that her block still had no security rooms, so that if the couple wants to go out at night, they have to take their little boy to sleep in the security matron told me. "When we're at home and a Katyusha falls, we just ignore it. It would be more dangerous to go down the open staircase, I guess."

On Friday the northern border was a picture of pastoral peace, with green fields and fish ponds reflecting the brilliant sunshine under a cloudless sky. The only fire I noted in several hundred kilometres of driving was the prunings from orchards being burned by hill farmers.

Farmers were working on both sides of the border, as though nothing had happened. On the Lebanese side we noticed felabehn with wooden ploughs. Along the northern road, which literally hugs the border, only the frequent yellow signs "Halt. Danger. Frontier Ahead," reminded you that this was a dangerous place sometimes. At Kibbutz Sasa, which terrorists hit with a Katyusha at midnight on Wednesday, the members were lying on the lawn enjoying lunch breaks, the hum of conversation punctuated by the call of children and the chirping of birds in the dark green trees. "This was the first shell in exactly a year. We didn't take much notice this time. Most of us didn't even wake up," Yisrael, an ex-American member of the kibbutz, told me.

In Metulla, everybody was looking forward to a good Pesach guest season. "It's been pretty quiet here lately. We only heard the shooting from afar. Let's hope it'll stay that way at least till Passover. We need the guests," Council Chairman Assaf Frenkel said. He noted that the Aradim Hotel, which will hold a seder, is fully booked.

Among the villagers, who are reputed by wags to keep onions handy so as not to appear too cheerful when visitors ask how things are, there was some grumbling. "The Government makes us pay for our own security rooms," one graying matron told me. "They know that the people of Metulla don't run away. We have behind us 75 years of holding on. So they build the free rooms in Kiryat Shmona. I suppose my grandchildren will still be paying for ours."

But even she couldn't hide her satisfaction at last year's big fruit harvest and relative quiet. She hastened to add, "I'm not complaining."

I also visited one of the army units along the border. The soldiers said the "cold is worse than the terrorists." As to the Lebanese, "they wave to us, we exchange shakoms and sometimes they pass us letters assuring us that they hate the terrorists and want nothing to do with them," a young long-haired sergeant told me.

One of the reserve men on duty with the unit, the 41-year-old head waiter of the Tel Aviv restaurant Casbah, is an anti-tank gunner. He assured us that "though the food here is not like the Casbah's, it really is good. It also makes me feel good to be together with all these young boys, and the girl soldiers are really pretty."

Police Band marks jubilee
The Israel Police Band will mark its 50th anniversary with a festive concert tomorrow evening at Jerusalem's Beit Ha'am at 8.30. The 31-man band's current director is Superintendent Arie Zemanek.

Founded in 1921, the Palestine Police Band — as it was then called — was first led by Aubrey Silver, a former sergeant in the Jewish Legion.

The programme will feature the world premiere of a piccolo divertimento commissioned by the Israel Composers' Fund from Shabtai Petruska and Israel premiere of works by Don Eshed and Gordon Jacob.

HOUSE COLLAPSE IN OLD CITY

By ABRAHAM RABINOVICH
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Municipal employees worked through Friday night to clear rubble from a collapsed house in the Old City in which five labourers were feared trapped. The men were found yesterday to be safe in their home village near Hebron.

The two-story building in Rehov Hagai, 200 metres north of the Western Wall, collapsed at about 9 o'clock. Municipal building inspectors had ordered the building to be evacuated on Thursday after spotting cracks in the structure. The upper storey served as classroom space for a nearby orphanage. The bottom storey contained two rooms, one of which was used as quarters by the five labourers from Dura, near Hebron.

Municipal workers were on the scene shortly after the collapse. When neighbours said that the labourers might be in the building, some 40 workers were brought to the scene and local residents who had been sitting in nearby coffee houses joined in the rescue efforts.

It was not until yesterday morning that a neighbour was found who knew the names of the labourers and where they came from. A municipal employee who comes from Dura drove there and found that the five had returned to their village for the week-end.

The building is more than 100 metres from the tunnel dug by the Ministry for Religious Affairs along the Temple Mount's Western Wall. Municipal officials stressed that there was no connection.

Municipal Engineer Amikam Yaffe, who was on the scene yesterday with Mayor Teddy Kolek, said that cracks had first been noted in the building a year and a half ago, and that the landlord had inserted concrete struts at the insistence of the Municipality. The struts could be seen yesterday standing upright in the rubble.

Mr. Yaffe noted that many buildings in the Old City were not securely built. The roof of the collapsed building had been covered with more than two metres of fill and had apparently given way under the weight.

Rehov Hagai was closed yesterday to worshippers on their way to the Western Wall, police diverting them through the shuk. A small tractor and truck had been brought into the narrow street and by late yesterday had succeeded in removing most of the rubble. The job is expected to be completed today.

Yeshiva students said 'used' in fraud case

TEL AVIV. — Yeshiva students were employed by Meir Turnheim, a rabbi turned businessman from Enei Brak, in circulating bad cheques in connection with fraudulent deals totalling some IL2m., police told the District Court here on Friday.

The police were appealing against Turnheim's release from custody 24 hours earlier by the Magistrate's Court. They told District Court Judge Yitzhak Raveh that Turnheim might hamper their investigation of other persons connected with the case.

Judge Raveh ordered him to be remanded in custody for an additional seven days.

Turnheim and his business partner, Ya'acov Vardon (who has since been released on bail), were first remanded on March 3. According to the police, Turnheim had gained the confidence of an American rabbi who wanted to establish a yeshiva in Jerusalem and obtained from him a number of blank cheques of a U.S. bank in exchange for a promise of credits.

After the rabbi left the country, Turnheim allegedly filled out the cheques for a total of some $354,000 and drew the money from his firm's bank in Pardess Katz.

The police said the suspect also used yeshiva students to pass uncovered cheques. (Ihm)

J.D.L. members plan to settle in Samaria

Jerusalem Post Reporter
Some 60 young members of the Jewish Defence League in the U.S. are planning to establish a settlement in Samaria. This was announced in Jerusalem on Friday by the secretary of the League's Israel branch, Mr. Yosef Schneider, who said the settlers will start arriving in a few months' time.

Negotiations for official approval of the project are still going on, Mr. Schneider said. The settlers will first undergo training at the field school in Moshav Argaman and agricultural training at a number of veteran settlements. They are due to be joined by 15 immigrant families from the Soviet Union. (Ihm)

Carmiel now has population of 5,000

CARMIEL. — The population of Carmiel has just passed 5,000 — half of them immigrants and half veterans and young couples.

Council Chairman Baruch Wanger said last week that some 600 families would settle there in the next 12 months, of which 300 would be immigrants and 200 veterans and young couples. Seven hundred homes were now being built and 500 more would soon be started. A hotel and a restaurant project have been approved, he said.

Carmiel was established in 1964.

Minsk ulpan leader here

LOD AIRPORT. — A large group of Russian immigrants arrived here Friday morning by El Al, from Vienna. The group includes families from Georgia, Riga, Lvov, Vilna, Minsk, Czernowitz, Leningrad, Kiev and Moscow.

Among the new arrivals is Arkady Zeitlin, 24, who directed an ulpan in Minsk. In mid-February, he related, he received a letter forbidding the continued operation of the ulpan, and K.G.B. men came to his home to see that he complied.

However, he added, he was about to close the ulpan in any event to go to Israel. His students now have other teachers in Minsk, with whom they are continuing their studies, he said. (Ihm)

AFP quoted "reliable sources" in Moscow as saying the Soviet authorities granted exit permits in January and February to 5,000 Jews who wished to emigrate to Israel. Nevertheless, according to a statement made by Foreign Minister Alexei Eban in the Knesset on Tuesday, there was a substantial decline in Soviet immigration in February.

Labs for immigrant scientists envisaged

A fund is to be established for the construction of laboratories which would absorb immigrant scientists, Premier Golda Meir told a thousand twelfth grade students from all over the country at a meeting in Beit Berl on Friday. The meeting was dedicated to problems of immigration and absorption.

Mrs. Meir rejected complaints that Russian immigrants receive better treatment than immigrants from Moslem countries. She hinted to the audience of 1,000 that many things are being done for Jews who are persecuted in such countries, but these things cannot be made public at present.

It is distressing, she said, to hear people questioning the very need for immigration for the first time since it began. "It's a sign we have failed to teach Zionism to youth," she said. Israel belongs to all the Jews, wherever they are, she added.

One terrorist killed, one held near Gaza

Jerusalem Post Reporter
GAZA. — A wanted terrorist was killed and another captured by an army patrol at Beit Lahiyeh, north of here, early yesterday morning.

The patrol, detecting two armed men, ordered them to halt. One of the men raised his hands and surrendered, but the other fled. The soldiers shot and killed him after he failed to heed their warning shots.

Both men were later identified as terrorists wanted for attacks on military vehicles and personnel.

Ovadia Yosef may fight Nissim for Chief Rabbi

By DAVID LANDAU
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Rabbi Ovadia Yosef, Sephardi Chief Rabbi of Tel Aviv, is considering standing in the national Chief Rabbinate elections. It is reliably learned that Rabbi Yosef is under pressure from right-wing rabbinical circles to put forward his candidacy against the present incumbent, Chief Rabbi Yitzhak Nissim.

Rabbi Yosef has not yet agreed to do so — but neither has he refused outright.

At the relatively young age of 51, Rabbi Yosef is highly respected as an halachic scholar and is extremely popular among the Oriental communities. It is thought that if he stood he would give Rabbi Nissim "a good run."

The Chief Rabbinate elections will be held this summer under a new law passed by the Knesset last week.

With both Rabbi Unterman, the current Ashkenazi Chief Rabbi, and Rabbi Yosef seriously considering standing, the Government's desire to see Rabbis Goren and Nissim returned is no longer assured of success.

The Government — both the Labour Party and the National Religious Party — believe that Rabbis Goren and Nissim are more liberal-minded than Rabbis Unterman and Yosef.

Rabbi Unterman is expected to declare early this week that he will not accept the post of "Honorary President of the Chief Rabbinate Council" which the new Chief Rabbinate Elections Law created for an outgoing Chief Rabbi who does not stand for re-election. This will leave him with the option of declaring his candidacy at a later stage.

FEARS OF counterfeit IL100 notes being in circulation have been scotched by the Bank of Israel. The rumours arose last week with the discovery of notes bearing a different portrait of Herzl from those issued earlier. A Bank spokesman explained that two different portraits were used deliberately.

HUNDREDS OF watches, valued at IL70,000, were stolen on Thursday night from the Ebdin Jewellery Shop at Damascus Gate, Jerusalem. The burglars also took IL5,000 in cash.

MORE THAN 5,500 members of the Liberal professions immigrated in 1971. Of these, 30 per cent are in the humanities; 25 per cent are engineers; 20 per cent, social scientists; 18 per cent natural scientists, and seven per cent physicians and pharmacists.

APPROXIMATELY 7,000 workers from the administered areas are currently employed in the Haifa area, the Haifa Economic Club was told on Thursday.

British settlers urged to help under-privileged

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Western settlers' association should not confine themselves to dealing with problems of immigration from the West but also with the under-privileged strata of Israel society, as well as with immigrants from other countries, such as Russia. This was stressed by Mr. Avraham Harman, president of the Hebrew University, speaking at the opening session of the 21st annual conference of Hitahdut Olei Britania (British Settlers' Association) at Beit Agron in Jerusalem last night.

Mr. Harman said that, with the increase of the country's population — mainly through immigration — the country's problems should be eased instead of intensified, because immigration brings with it economic development and social and educational advances.

The conference is due to wind up this afternoon.

Bar-Lev calls at Histadrut H.Q.

He met the Histadrut Secretary-General, Mr. Yitzhak Ben-Aharon, for a discussion of wage and price problems.

Ashdod pay pact to be signed today

Jerusalem Post Reporter
ASHDOD. — An agreement on a new incentive pay programme for the port foremen is due to be signed at Histadrut headquarters in Tel Aviv this afternoon.

The foremen, ending a 28-hour strike on Thursday, accepted the terms of the programme, agreeing to wait until the middle of May for their first increment after a one-month "measuring" period.

Work at Ashdod Port has now been resumed at full speed. The number of ships waiting their turn outside the breakwater has dropped from 15 to 11.

Bar-Ilan Rector won't talk to student strikers

Jerusalem Post Reporter
RAMAT GAN. — Bar-Ilan students will have to return to lectures before the University administration will deal with them, Bar-Ilan University Rector, Prof. Menahem Zvi Kadari, told reporters at Lod on Friday on his return from a 10-day trip to London.

Students have been striking since February 23 to press demands that B.A. final exams be abolished, and that Prof. Kadari retract a letter to faculty members in which he allegedly said they were too generous in grading.

Prof. Kadari expressed the hope that regular studies will resume soon, perhaps at the beginning of the week. He emphasized that the faculty must preserve its academic independence — it cannot abolish B.A. final exams without substituting something else in their stead.

Student Union chairman, Mr. Shimon Ohayon, said that if no way out of the dispute is found by tomorrow, the students will escalate their protests.

The students have meanwhile dropped all other demands aside from their demand that the B.A. finals be done away with. Actually, finals are held only in the English, Bible and Literature Departments as well as the School of Education, and it may well decide to scrap them as well.

Minister of Education Yigal Alon told students on Friday that the regulations of the Council for Higher Education prevent him from intervening in the dispute.

A delegation of striking students had asked him to use his good offices to mediate between them and the administration. Mr. Alon explained that he is only allowed to act as a go-between in such cases when the two sides request him to do so.

Akzin leaving Haifa U. post

HAIFA. — The President and Rector of Haifa University, Prof. Benjamin Akzin, is now ending his three-year term of office and will return to research work and writing.

The academic staff will meet in June to elect a new President and Rector. No candidates have yet been named.

Kanner leaves Tel Aviv post

TEL AVIV. — Ex-police commissioner Ya'acov Kanner, who ran the City's inspection corps for the past two years, left municipal service on Friday. Mr. Kanner was assaulted and threatened by street pedlars when he set out to enforce municipal by-laws forbidding any sort of unlicensed trade.

At a farewell party at the Town Hall, Deputy Mayor Ariel Amdad praised Mr. Kanner for facing up to difficult challenges in a city "where the enforcement of law and order is by no means a simple matter. This is a city of many contrasts and the laws are often outmoded and inadequate," he said.

Replacing Mr. Kanner as head of the inspection corps is Mr. Ze'ev Katz.
